A TRAMP.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY JOHN CLERKE.

Yes, a "tramp," though I relish the name of it
No better, perhaps, than would you,
And sometimes I blush for the shame of it,
But what can a poor fellow do?
There surely is little enjoyment
In trudging thus day after day,
While seeking in vain for employment,
And begging for bread by the way.

My trade, do you ask? I'm a printer,
And boast of some knowledge and skill,
But I've scarce set a type since last winter,
Though not for the want of a will.
To labor I'm ever been ready,
When I have had labor to do;
But—perhaps I've been rather unsteady—
I'm sorry to own it is true.

For though a long time I've been thinking,
And making resolves in my mind,
To break off the habit of drinking,
It isn't so easy, I find;
For I've had my share of life's trouble
And I have been fond of my fun,
And with this provocative double
To foolish excesses I've run.

And thus I have lost reputation,
And injured my health and my purse,
And for'alled each situation
I've held; yet thank God its no worse.
For spilled milk it's no use to sorrow,
My penance, I trust, will be brief,
And then, on some happy to-morrow,
I'll really turn down a new leaf.

Do I look pretty rough? Yes, I know it.
I'm tattered, and soiled, and all that;
I've had a hard time, and I show it
From my shoes to the crown of my hat.
For months I have earned not a dollar,
And so, if you please, you'll excuse
My want of a new paper collar
And the holes in the toes of my shoes.

Five states have I journed through, seeking
For work, but no work can I find,
It is only the truth I am speaking,
And, though some employers were kind,
There were others who looked with suspicion
Upon me and said, with a sneer,
"How came you in such a condition?
I guess you're been pressing your beer."

At night I have slept in the forest
Or lodged in a barn or a shed,
And sometimes, when hunger was sorest,
Have asked for a morsel of bread,
When e'len a man would refuse me
In language insulting and vile,
And in turbulent spirit abuse me
For trav'ling in beggarly style.

There are men whose miserly features
Contract with a sneer or a frown
Whene'er they see one of God's creatures
That's gotten by poverty down.
And charity is not in fashion
'Mong Christians of latter-day school,
While he who to want shows compassion
Is classed as a good hearted fool.

And so, because one man in twenty
Would turn me with insult away,
I walked through the middle of plenty
And fasted for many a day.
And often, when hungry and weary
I, supperless, sought my rude bed,
The world seemed all dismal and dreary,
Without one bright star overhead.

Near used up? Yes, I am: you can see that,
And I have been sick lately, too;
It is not very strange I should be that,
Living out in the rain and the dew.
My stomach has had nothing in it—
Next to nothing, at least, for three days,
And I've an idea this minute
When next a square meal I can raise.

How long will it last? I don't know, sir,
I think there will soon be a turn;
Ah! I want is some sort of a show, sir,
A moderate living to earn.
And though now, I'm homeless and friendless,
And living on puddings of air,
I know that this thing can't be endless,
At least I will never despair.

Yes, some of the boys have been good to me,
And fed me, and treated me well,
While others, have been rude to me,
And kicked at me after I fell.
The former, as true men and brothers,
I'll cherish so long as I live,
But I dont care a fig for the others,
Though I can forget and forgive.

Would I keep a good place if I got it?
Just give me a trial and see.
Yes, I might take a drink if I met it;
If I didn't it wouldn't be me.
And yet I mean never to drink so
As I have in the times that are past;
I shall quit it—that is—well, I think so,
And be sober and steady at last.

And the brains that I have in my noddle
I'll use with discretion and care,
And become unto types a model
Of virtue and temperance rare;
And I'll stick with due zeal to my cases,
And carefully save up my stamps,
And then, on some happy to-morrow,
I'll really turn down a new leaf.

And one day an office I'll purchase,
And a house, and some land, and a wife
I will marry, join one of the churches,
And be happy the rest of my life.
And when a poor tramp comes in my way,
Undone by the troubles that throng
So thickly on life's rugged highway,
He shall not pass hungry along.

A sit? Sir, I thank you. I thought so,
When I saw the kind look in your eye;
You've been there yourself—Is it not so?
And know how it is. Well, I'll try
To show you that I can be grateful
For kindness upon me bestowed,
And if you should find me deceitful,
Just put me again on the road.

A LILY AND A ROSE;

OR,

THE SCHEMER AND HIS VICTIMS.

CHAPTER XXIV.

FIND HER.

In the few seconds that elapsed while Leonard grasped Rose's neglected lover's brother, and was grasped by him, the whole story of his early life passed in a panorama before his mind's eye. He remembered his brother—a fine, handsome fellow, a true scion of the Grantleys—remembered his kindly voice and joyous laugh, remembered the old hall, with its crumbling walls and dark wood staircases, and remembered suddenly the wail of mourning and woe that rang through the old pile when the fatal news of the funeral that his eldest son had gone from him to return no more.

Now, too, the name of Roberts was familiar to him. It was the name of one of his father's laborers, and there had been some talk concerning the disappearance of Darrell's daughter shortly after that of his brother.

Rose had many lovers, among them this James Roberts, standing before him, but she had treated the honest, sturdy James with the same indifference she meted out to all the rest.

Now all was clear as the daybreak that was streaming through the curtains in front of him. His brother had loved Rose Darrell and she had been searching for him.

Alas, a vain search, for he had held in his hands the battered, sea stained hat.

"And you are Mr. Haro'd's brother?" asked Roberts.

"Yes, I am Harold Grantley's brother," replied Leonard, sadly, stooping to pick up his pipe, which in his excitement, he had dropped. "You do not want to go now?" he said. "Come into the next room."

The light of early day poured through the stained windows as Leonard drew the silken curtains aside, and Roberts, with a crimson flush upon his face, stooped down and removed the list from his thick boots—Leonard turning to the window with a delicacy which the man appreciated.

Leonard drew a chair to the table, and seating himself on the back of it—he never could sit like any one else, but sit, stand, or lounge how he would, it was always gracefully—

"And you have found no trace?" he asked.

Roberts shook his head—

"None, sir!" he said, sadly. "London's a big place—a big, heart-reading place—a soul soon gets lost in it."

Leonard sighed.

"We must still try to recover the girl you love, Roberts," he said; we must get some some help. Detectives—"

James Roberts interrupted him with a sharp laugh.

"Detectives!" he said, grimly. "Blind dogs with their teeth drawn are not much use, sir. And a detective's worse than a blind dog—he's a stupid one as well. Ah, sir, you haven't been living with me all these years I have been searching and searching. I have met many and many a detective in the force called clever, and seen them bundled game that has been right under their noses. Detectives are no use. Besides, hired hounds cost money, sir, and I've had to work to keep soul and body together, even with—" and he glanced grimly at the crowbar lying on the table.

"Never mind the money," was the sentence on the tip of Leonard's tongue, but he remembered himself, and the question flashed across his mind—How much better off was he than the man before him, with the single exception that he got his small handful of corn honestly. His living, too, was a hand to mouth existence, but—

And then there poured upon him a remembrance of last night's events. He had forgotten in this new, startling occurrence, last night's eventful work. He got up from the chair and paced the room.

"You must get all help needful, Roberts, and get it unsparingly. God forgive me! I have lived my life of selfishness too long. I have forgotten my dead brother even; I who should have his memory green and flourishing, Roberts, I owe you and yours much; poor Harold loved Rose, like you, with all his heart and soul. I remember, dallied that I am to have ever forgotten it, that he spoke of her often, and always tenderly. Now he is dead and the girl he loved is missing, and I have been sitting still all these years without troubling myself to ask what remains to be done! Selfish brute!"

"No, no, sir!" said Roberts, eagerly, rising and putting his hand on the artist's arm. "You wrong yourself, sir, indeed you do! How should you know of her trouble? your father even knew nothing of the love that had grown between Rose and poor Mr. Harold. You are not to blame, sir; it is me—me, who, like a discontented beast, was always growling and grumbling at the quiet life, and longing to get away from the farm and be in the great London. I had no time to look after the little girl, and like a great, blind fool, let her sorrow on and sorrow on without seeing her tearful eyes and white face, until she had gone, flown in the night like a bird, and left the old house desolate and miserable."

And the strong man, borne back to his old life by his rapid words, bowed his head on his hands and groaned. Leonard, almost as much moved, laid his hand upon the great, huge shoulder with a sympathetic gesture. "Cheer up," he said, "you will find her"

"Find her!" cried the man, in a voice that rang in Leonard's ears for many a night afterwards. "Aye, shall find her, may be, sir, but how? You haven't seen the side of London—I have, sir. I know what waits a young girl, poor and friendless, alone and homeless. It's a hell as waits for them! A hell of shame and despair. See you here, sir. I'm afraid almost to hunt her much longer for fear of finding her——"

Here his voice dropped into a hoarse whisper, while his face grew white. "Not my little Rose, that used to pull my hair and laugh the laugh of a fine innocent hearted child, but one of the painted Jezebels you may meet by the score walking along the streets o' night!" Leonard shuddered. "Look you here, sir!" continued James Roberts, his eyes blazing passionately, and his hand closing on Leonard's arm in a grief that nearly broke it. "If I found my Rose turned into one of those, I'd—hunt—and hunt, aye, harder than ever to find the devil as ruined her, and when I'd found him I'd tear his black heart out, so help me God!"

And with the oath he threw his hands up above his head with a sudden gesture that sent the blood in a rush to Leonard's heart, for he knew as if he had read it graven on stone, that those hands would fall, charged with murder, upon the head of him who should have ruined the hapless Rose.

"Hush! hush!" he said. "Be calm, Roberts, we will find her, and, please God, find her uninjured, a pure-hearted girl still. Remember, as you yourself say, London is a great place and a missing soul is a needle in a truss of hay. Hope on, hope on, and search still. I will help you; do not shake your head! You will stay here with me—we will search for her together and find her."

"Please God, sir, please God! but I'm a fearful, I'm a strong man and I've gone all wrong," and he looked at the list and jemmy lying on the table with a shamed sadness. "How could she keep straight, a poor, weak girl, in this grand London, with all its gins and snares. My poor Rose, my poor Rose!"

James Roberts walked to the table slowly and his head down upon his breast sadly, and took up his felt cap.

"That can't be, sir," he said, firmly. "You and I are no fit companions. You would catch a fever or somu't worse, even if I was your servant. I—I—God help me, I am a thief, sir, and you are a gentleman. No, no, let me go my way, sir, and forget as you have ever seen me."

Leonard sprang to the door.

"You shall not," he said, earnestly.

A sad smile lit up the face of the man as he answered, walking towards the door, cap in hand:—

"Yes, yes, I'll go, Mr. Leonard; you will not stop me, sir?"

Leonard could not resist the sorrowful voice, and stood aside reluctantly.

"At least you will tell me where you are going?"

Roberts shook his head. "I am going to hunt again, sir; hunt until I find her, find her what I may; you cannot help me, sir; indeed I'd let you, and be thankful if you could, but you can't. My poor Rose will be hid away in some such place as I know of—and you have never even heard. I'll hunt until I find her."

Leonard held out his hand sadly, but again the sad smile lit up the face of Roberts as he shook his head. "I'm not fit to shake hands with you, sir, and I won't."

"I wish it," said Leonard, simply, still holding out his hand. "Not now, not now," was the reply. "I may some day, sir, for I've left the old life behind, left it with the list there on the table—forever.

"Some day, when I've found little Rose, I'll come and thank you, sir, for the good you've done me this night, and then maybe you'll let me shake hands, but I won't now."

Humbly the words were spoken, in a voice that was broken, and sentences that were eloquent in their simple earnestness, and Leonard's hand dropped to his side and he murmured "good-bye."

James Roberts had gone down the "picturesque" stairs and into the street, leaving Leonard Grantley standing, as if in a dream, against the door, with his arms folded and his head sunk thoughtfully upon his breast.

Surely he was dreaming; all was a dream from the passionate kiss of last night to the dim figure of the departing burglar of this morning.

A dream! Surely a dream, or the fumes of the red old wine had not yet cleared from his brain, and the events of the night and morning were but sweet and grim fairy tales sung by the dark skinned grapes of some sunlit vineyard of South Burgundy!

CHAPTER XXV.

MEPHISTOPHELES.

"A ball is one of the necessary evils of society," said some great man, and he was very near the truth. At all times a ball is considered a nuisance, to men at least; to women it is the earthly paradise; but a "hop" in the heat of summer, when even the moon rises white hot, is simply monstrous.

But Lady Mildwin's was a masked ball, which made the difference, and coming even in the hot and sultry weather the fellows vowed it a clever idea, and decided all to be there. Four of our dramatis personæ were looking forward to the masquerade night with something more than interest.

Raymond Garton had arranged that his mother should escort Lillian, and that Leonard was to accompany them.

"I am not going with you, my dear Leonard; masquerade balls are a little out of my way. I am so unromantic, so thoroughly simple-minded and matter-of-fact, that I cannot bring myself to wear a crimson cloak, blue laced—trimmed apologies for trousers, yellow leathern boots, a hat like Lillian's garden nondescript with a white feather and a wig of yellow hair. No, boy, you go and be courtier of Charles the Second period, or Ali Pasha, or a Red Cross knight, or anything absurd you like, and leave me to my club and a leader in the 'Pall-Mall.' I don't envy you, you will be hot and perspiring, trying in vain to get away from Dan Godfrey's band, while I am sipping my coffee and thinking about bed."

And yet the same evening he had made this announcement, lying full length upon a garden seat at Sydenham, he had said to Rose:—

"Have you been a good girl while I have been away, Rosebud mine? You nod your head! Well, that's better than saying you have and telling a story. Then I am going to give you a treat. You know it's a great deal too hot even to rise and kiss you, Rosebud mine!" stretching over to where she sat and lifting her hand to his lips, "therefore, as it is so warm, I am going to take you to a ball."

"A ball!" echoed Rose, with some pleasure, but with less vivacity than she would have done a few months since.

London life and the society of thoroughbreds was polishing her country manners into something like tone.

"It will be very delightful, but very hot,"

"Yes, very," he said, with a slight smile. "My man is going to wait in the corridor with half a dozen towels to wipe me down after the dances."

"Nonsense," laughed the delighted woman, already hearing in her mind's ear the tuning of the instruments. "I have danced——" she was commencing, when the flush that flashed up to his face reminded her that he had forbidden her ever to mention her past life. "I beg your pardon——"

"You have danced in warmer weather," said Raymond, softly, ignoring both the slip of the tongue and the apology.

"Women would dance in and through anything, I firmly believe. I will bet there was some women or other dancing to Nero's fiddling while Rome was burning. But you won't have to dance much, for this is a masquerade ball."

"A masked ball!" cried Rose, "how delightful! Oh, what shall I dress in?"

"I thought so!" exclaimed Raymond, addressing the trees with a softly triumphant air. "I think I even said, under my breath, that the first question she would ask would be—what shall I wear? Oh, woman, woman, thy name is Vanity!"

Rose laughed.

"For shame! I am sure we are not half so vain as men. Why, the greatest of you all are vainer than we are. I read in that 'Lives of the Poets' you told me to read that even Lord Byron curled his hair. Curled his hair! fancy."

Raymond laughed.

"Byron was a poet and a man of the world, and being the latter he knew that other people would be far readier to call him the former if he wore his hair long and curled its straightened ends. Besides, Rosebud mine, one would forgive the man who wrote 'Childe Harold' and 'Don Juan,' curling his teeth if he chose to do so."

"Ah, yes! but——"

"Don't argue, it's a great deal too hot, but give me a cigarette," and he laid back with a soft smile, watching through his half-closed eyes, the fair face of the woman whose ruin he had made so pleasant, as she lit, with dainty fingers, the tiny roll of Turkey tobacco, and bending over him with a pretty laugh, thrust it between his teeth.

"Oh, vain and lazy man," she laughed, "tell me, what shall I wear?"

* * * * * * *

Towards two o'clock the entrances to Lady Mildred's noble mansion were getting thronged. Clean carriages of every description lined the broad road, and a crowd of footmen found themselves fully employed in keeping guard and ward over the gravel sweep and handsome entrance, while black robed waiters, bearing gold tipped wands, ushered the ever arriving motley clad guests through the spacious, floral lined corridors.

The scene was dazzling in the extreme; floods of light poured from the windows and entrances upon the brightly and variously clad guests, thronging with graceful confusion towards the ball-room.

GEORGE D. CHAPLIN, Actor.

Here a King Charles in silk lace and jewels, with glittering hilted sword, brushed against a stalwart Cromwell in heavy garb and stout accoutrements to be again in his turn gently urged forward by a Crusader in steel armor and red crossed shield. The ladies dresses were magnificent in the extreme; all the thousand colors of the rainbow employed to add charm to the costumes of almost every nation under the sun, lent a brilliancy to the scene dazzling and utterly indescribable. And amongst all the stirring mass dance music floated through the air and echoed along the terraces.

Bursts of laughter and merriment broke out at every moment, as some mask, confused, by the crowd, lights, music and unusual garb, lost his friends and vainly strove to recover among the moving, many colored sands, the particular speck he had lost. Great amusement and delight was enjoyed by all at the mysterious air which surrounded the scene. The shielding mask defied all scrutiny. Friends walked silently side by side without recognizing each other, and the air of surprise with which, when a voice betrayed a mask, his friends regarded him was delightful in the extreme. At eleven o'clock, when the moon rose majestically in the still summer sky, the ball room was full and the dancing in high swing, Mrs. Garton, Lillian and Leonard entered.

Lillian wore a sweeping black dress of Venetian silk, with a cloud of lace upon the glistening black silk and the white shoulders. Diamonds glistened here and there in her superb hair, like a star shining through a tree, and a row of amethysts set round with pearls blazed on her white neck. Leonard had donned the picturesque garb of a Spanish mountaineer, and with his finely proportioned figure, gracefully set off by the rich silken dress fringed with silver, and his hair brushed off his white forehead, and falling on the deep silken collar in a mingle tangle, he looked every inch the younger son of a Spanish noble.

With the two ladies on his arms he threaded the glittering groups, and found beside an exquisite statue of the Slave Girl a seat for Mrs. Garton, who was sufficiently delighted with a dress of pearl silk made up Etruscan fashion not to mind being left alone; then he said to Lillian:—

"You have given me this waltz, I think," and bending down to catch her "yes," and see the blush that shone below the mask, he bore her off.

It was difficult to dance, so crowded were the rooms and so full of gaiety was the multitude of masks. The amusement of the moment seemed to be the constant endeavors of everybody to find out who everybody else was, and yet guard their own incognito at the same time.

Leonard stopped with a laugh after a hundred turns or so. "No use trying," he said, as an admirably got up Mephistopheles in black, close fitting velvet, and sharp pointed ears, just visible beneath the small cap, darted noiselessly past them.

"The rooms are too crowded, all the nations of the world seem here. Shall we walk?" and he put her hand on his arm and joined the throng of masks promenading round the saloon. Many a mask, male and female, turned their heads to look after the handsome figure of the young Spaniard, and whisper a word of admiration of the magnificently attired Venetian Princess.

"Can you guess who she is?" was the frequent inquiry.

"Not in the least," was the instant reply.

Several attempts were made to pierce the disguise of the black robed Lillian, three or four masks darting from behind a pillar and addressing as apology for their sudden appearance, hoping to elicit a word of acknowledgment from the beautiful girl, but the perfect lips remained invariably closed, and a gracious inclination of the stately head was the only answer vouchsafed, while a few words gruffly spoken in Spanish from Leonard served further to mystify the curious spies, who returned to their groups with—

"Can't make them out!"

The band started for the Caledonians and Leonard joined a set with Lillian for his partner. The gay scene, the music, the flashing light and the wealth of colors were filling him, cool as he usually was, with a confused excitement that was rather pleasant.

Lillian, woman like, was in her glory, and clung to his arms in a flutter of enjoyment, listening to his whispered words with eyes that sparkled through the mask holes like the diamonds in her hair, and blushes that shone beneath the black line the mask made across her beautiful face.

The exquisite taste of her dress delighted Leonard's artistic eye, the perfume of her hair stole over his senses, and the light pressure of her small hand thrilled through him and made his heart throb. The passionate soul within him was like a sea, that the wand of her beauty waved into a storm.

Breathlessly, when the dance had finished, he led her to the seat where they had left Mrs. Garton—she had gone away on the arm of her old friend, the Indian general, whose moustache, grizzled and grey, defied all disguise—and threw himself down beside her.

"You are hot," she said, in a low voice, turning the gleam of her eyes upon him as he shook the hair from his forehead, his white chest half bare in the Spanish tunic, heaving for lack of breath.

"Yes, hot enough," he said with a low laugh, and an answering gleam in his eyes as he looked up at her:—"What a last dance was magnificent though; I hated dancing once, but I like it now," and he leant over towards her.

"Lillian!"

She turned again, her eyes cast down and her lips trembling.

"You have not forgotten! We came here for more than this. You have to tell me something!"

Her heart beat fast as he bent nearer and breathed out the last words in an eager whisper, and something like a cold shadow hand grasped her heart. Yes, she was to point out the road that would make her his forever—forever—forever!

"You have not forgotten!" he murmured again.

"No, I have not forgotten," she breathed; "oh, how can I tell you? I cannot tell you here!"

"Ah! I see," he said rising, and offering his arm. "See, we can get out here, on to the terrace. We——"

"Oh, Lillian, I have been searching for you everywhere! This is Colonel Perron. Do you know I knew him directly, although he looks like a Roman, does he not?" and Mrs. Garton laughed nervously as she slid from the colonel's arm on to Lillian's.

Leonard frowned—bless'd the mask remember—and wished Mrs. Garton and the "Roman" at—Scarpeon's Tabernacle; but wishes were of little use when two people not to be disposed of easily turn up at the wrong moment.

"Oh, Mrs. Garton," said Lillian, "I could not think where you had gone. Is it not warm, colonel?"

"It is," said the colonel, emphatically, "especially with a breastplate on and greaves. They say a man's never too old to play the fool, and I think they're right when I catch a glimpse of myself in the mirrors."

Lillian smiled.

"It's very delightful, don't you think?" she said, still on Leonard's arm, who stood motionless as a statue, biting his moustache with excessive but well controlled impatience.

"Yes," replied the Roman, with some doubt in his tone. "Very hard work, though; I stormed the breach at Balaklava and didn't feel half so hot. Look there——"

He broke off. A Mephistopheles passed them noiselessly, with a lady in the garb of a Corsican peasant girl upon his arm.

"There's his satanic majesty."

"Yes," said Lillian, turning to look at the two figures as they passed and were lost in the crowd. "How splendidly diabolical he looks, exactly like the character in 'Faust.' I have seen him once or twice this evening." Then the four walked on.

"There's the music for the cotillion," said the colonel, "will you give me this?"

Lillian bowed, smothering a sigh. And Leonard, who had been expecting this all along, transferred her to the Roman veteran, whispering as he did so:—

"Behind the pillar."

She bowed slightly in answer, and then moved away upon the colonel's arm. Leonard leant against a statuette, gazing at the brilliant humanity as it moved in musical lines and curves, like one body to the charming strains of the crack band.

Once, as he gazed dreamily, thinking of nothing, for thought will not settle in such a scene, but flits from flower to flower like a very butterfly, he saw the slim, satanic figure of the Mephistopheles swinging the Corsican peasant in his long black, velvet-covered arms, and a dim recollection of the form, disguised as it was, seemed to take hold of his mind, but he could not grasp it sufficiently to identify the black figure, so let it slip. And ever and anon the graceful figure of Lillian came in sight and his thoughts flew to the strange course of events which was driving him on to—what?

He could not think steadily, indeed he said to himself that a masquerade ball was not the place to think, and rousing himself from his restless reverie, he walked towards a group of men who were lounging against a huge vase that had been dug from the ruins of the buried Pompeii, and as he passed them he heard his own name mentioned and almost involuntarily his step slackened.

A tall Franciscan monk, with a most unsaintly mouth and moustache, was saying:—

"Clever? yes, very clever. There is not a better artist than Grantley going, but——" and a shrug of the shoulders finished the sentence most emphatically, though rather enigmatically.

"But, what?" enquired a sailor, in blue silk jacket and white linen trousers.

"But—he is going the downward road at a tandem pace. He can't last; they tell me he has nothing but what he paints, and he paints nothing now. Besides, I hear that Levi——"

Leonard passed out of hearing, but the words stuck to him and made him wince. He was already a subject for the probing knives and lancets of the fashionable chit-chat? Ah! it would be all right, he could not help thinking, when Lillian, the heiress, was his.

"How base of him!" cries the gentle, righteous reader; "to think of her money so?"

Remember, Leonard Grantley was a hero of flesh and blood, of human virtues, and of human faults and feelings.

The dance was drawing to a close, and the last promenade round had been encored and ran through while Leonard had been moralizing, and the many garbed dancers were streaming hither and thither in search of seats and nooks.

As he turned to regain the pillar at which Lillian had promised to meet him, the Mephistopheles again slid noiselessly past, with the peasant girl upon his arm, and this time a searching pair of eyes gleamed through the mask and scanned Leonard's face, then the next minute the two figures disappeared behind the pillars, and Leonard walked on.

"Are you eyjoying yourself, my Rose?" asked the Mephistopheles, in a soft whisper, as he and the peasant girl walked into a cool recess, sheltered from the glare of the ball room by a barrier of ferns.

"Oh, Raymond! it is delightful," replied Rose. "It is a Paradise!"

"Yes, a fool's!" he muttered.

"I have never been so happy. It is all so beautiful, so gay, so—Oh, I don't know; and you are so kind!"

"So you, Rose," he replied in his silky manner, drawing her to him and pressing her against his diabolical sable velvet with the tenderness of an angel. "To you who could be otherwise. It makes me happy to see you happy. And now you are tired, are you not?—and very hot, too—(fanning her with the black feather of his hat)—you will rest here, will you not? I am going to find some one and will return to you shortly."

Then he beckoned to a footman who was passing.

"Bring me an ice," he said. "You see, Rose, get cool for the next dance, and you will look fresh, even as the peasant girl you represent."

Then he passed noiselessly away.

Leonard waited a few minutes at the pillar where Mr. Garton was still sitting, placidly watching the scene and admiring her pearl silk, and then Lillian came upon the colonel's arm.

After a little chit-chat Leonard rose and offered his arm.

"I am going to take Miss Garton on the terrace, Mrs. Garton," he said. "She is not too hot, I think?"

CHAPTER XXVI.

TWO RECOGNITIONS.

"Is it not a lovely night?" she said, leaning over the stone balustrade of the terrace, and drawing her laces about her fair shoulders.

"Ay, as lovely as you are, Lillian," the artist answered passionately. "This is worth all the ball rooms in the kingdom," he said, drawing nearer to her, and pointing towards the moonlit heavens and the soft-lined shrubbery below.

For a few moments they remained leaning near one another, drinking in the beautiful scene, listening to each other breathing, and waiting for the first word.

Lillian sighed. Women always sigh when they are happiest.

"I would have life all one long summer's night, I think," she said. "Everything looks so beautiful in the light of the moon, the ugliness of the world is changed and softened almost into beauty. The hard corners are rounded off, and the trees, motionless now—are they not? stand out against the deep, still sky, like carven ebony. Ah! I love the night!"

"And I love you," murmured Leonard, bending and pressing his lips to her white arm. "Lillian, you are a poet in soul, an artist at heart! I glow at your words, I thrill at the music of your voice. When you speak of the beautiful I feel inspired, and could paint, aye, even to satisfy myself; you will be at my side to stay and encourage, to thrill and inspire me forever, will you not? remember, you are to show me the way," and his manly voice grew low and passionate as his hand sought, found and held hers.

"She turned her face away to hide the crimson shame. "It is not a woman's place to point the way," she murmured. Leonard strained her hand impatiently.

"Lillian, is this the time to say that? You know I am helpless, tell me what you propose," then he drew her towards him and held her against his heart, his hot breath stirring her loose rich hair.

She sighed passionately as her soft face touched his bare chest and hid itself from the light.

"I must tell you," she said; "he would never consent, I know, and if you—you will not stay for his sanction I—we must be married without. Do you remember Claude Melnotte and Lady Stanton?"

"Yes," said Leonard, eagerly.

"We will, they were married secretly and—and I know who married them. I have learnt everything about it."

"I see, I see," interrupted Leonard, "my beautiful Lillian, I see! Who married them, and where?"

"A clergyman in Islington; I don't know where that is, but I have his name and the address written here," and she took from the bosom of her dress the piece of paper on which Raymond Garton had written, with beautiful distinctness, the clergyman's name.

Leonard took it eagerly, and with a gesture of impatience took off his mask, it had got in the way of his eyes. "Ah!" he exclaimed, "this is Raymond Garton's writing; where did you get it?"

She blushed a bright crimson. "He dropped it and I picked it up."

"Dear Lillian!" he said, gently. "I see my way as plain as possible; we will not wait another week. To-morrow I will go and see the clergyman and hear what day he can make us two one heart, one soul; and you'll not say nay, dear Lillian? Stay; why should we delay even a day!" he exclaimed eagerly, his lips trembling and his eyes flashing into hers as she lifted them to his face. To-morrow, Lillian, you shall be mine!"

The words were spoken softly, and they thrilled two human beings to the core. The romantic heiress in the youth's arms, and the slim, sleek, black-skinned Mephistopheles shrinking behind the statue at their side.

"To-morrow!" she breathed fearfully.

"Aye, to-morrow!" he repeated. "Lilian, delay is danger; your guardian may grow suspicous any moment, even now he may; we do not know what evil chance may happen. He spoke even yesterday of going out of town, Heaven! he might go next week and take you with him! Be mine, Lillian, to-morrow!"

She shook her head.

"Oh, Leonard!" how can I? I have nothing ready."

He bit his lip and knit his brows.

"I have it!" he exclaimed. "I will call to-morrow morning—no, that won't do! Ah! you go out to-morrow I think, shopping? Take Mrs. Garton with you. Be at Howell's at 12 o'clock. Leave her in the shawl department—you see? tell her you will go into the ribbon place—or—what you will; then come quickly to the back entrance. I will have a brougham waiting, then leave the rest to me. No man on earth knows of this save ourselves——"

The dark eyes behind the vase twinkled, and the white teeth shone out from between the thin lips in a satanic grin.

"No pursuit can reach us. All being well, we will be married, then you shall return to Snowden Villa with some explanation of your absence. Then—Oh! let me think—I think I can a tidal train leaves at 11 o'clock to-morrow night—I know, for I heard Maurice Devling say so; your maid must pack a few things! Ah, Lillian, you are a woman, but do not hesitate to sacrifice a woman's foible for a woman's love, and do not risk everything by bringing too much. A small hand bag will suffice. I will have a carriage waiting at the corner at 11, and more! I have the plan graven on my brain like chiselled marble! Lillian, you shall be mine!"

The girl's face had grown white. The man's quick, startling plot had literally frightened her.

"Oh, Leonard!"

"Keep a brave heart, my Lillian!" he murmured. "You are faint. Here, let me take off this black mask that hides your loveliness," and resting her head against his arm, he gently undid the mask and slipped it off. "Now, my Lilian, what do you say? Say yes. Trust all to me, believe me I will not fail. Is it yes?"

"Yes," she breathed.

He caught her in his arms. As he did so, pressing his right arm round the trembling heiress' waist, his left hand held against his side the mask, the inside lined with crimson turned outwards. It looked like a ghastly wound in the clear moonlight.

"That is a brave girl!" he whispered, passionately; "a brave, beautiful girl! Come," and he wrapped her face round her and they turned from the baloony.

At that moment the figure of a peasant girl stepped out upon the terrace a short distance from them, stepped out at the very moment the moon streamed down upon the handsome, upturned face of the second son of Theodore Grantley, and upon the patch of blood hued crimson at his side.

The peasant girl stared, as if stricken a terrible blow, at the moonlit face—stared as at one risen from the dead, then threw up her two white arms towards the still, summer sky, and fell with a low moan to the cold stones.

The handsome face passed through the window with the heiress at its side, unconscious of the blow it had struck, but a dark form sprang noiselessly from behind the vase and knelt beside the fallen girl.

Catching the motionless form in his arms, he carried it to the light. The beautiful features were still and lifeless, shining white and pallid against the black velvet arm that upheld them. The mouth was half open, with a look of pain written upon the lips. The eyes were closed and deathlike.

The white, living face above the still, white, lifeless one, bent over it until its cheek touched the pallid lips.

"Oh, God! Not dead! Not dead! What is it?"

Then the black eyes with the wolfish glare looked round and round. What had stricken his darling down? Whither should he flee? An alarm would be detection, detection would lead to the overthrow of his plots, the overthrow of his plots would be—ruin. With a deep, hissed oath of pain, agony, fear and savage, puzzled rage, he took the lifeless figure to his heart, and with the noiseless speed of the very devil himself, plunged down the terrace steps into the dark shrubbery beneath.

CHAPTER XXVII.

A REVELATION.

Raymond Garton's true strength came out at this hour.

No one looking on, would ever have imagined that the slim, gentlemanly looking figure possessed such steely muscles and strong sinews.

He bore the fainting girl through the shrubbery with the apparent ease and stealth of an Indian, looking back every now and then with glittering rageful eyes at the flashing windows.

He reached the gate with the careful stealthiness of the Mephistopheles he represented. Some of the guests were strolling about the entrance getting cool.

He must not be seen. Here was a line of carriages—which was his?

Ah! there it was—the coachman talking to the footman—both with cigars in their mouth, the aroma of which their master recognized as belonging to a choice box he had specially set apart.

Setting Rose down upon the grass for a moment, he stole up behind the two servants and touched the footman on the shoulder—

"Quick!"

The man dropped the cigar with a sudden exclamation of startled surprise, and rushed to open the door.

Raymond glided back, caught up Rose, and with another quick glance, slipped into the carriage—

"Home! like lightning!"

At that moment a man—in the garb of the lower class—lounging in the paths and watching the guests, turned his head and saw Raymond Garton carrying his lifeless burden.

He could not see the face of the girl for an instant, but as Raymond stepped into the carriage the moon shone down upon the two white faces and lit up every feature.

The man uttered a low cry, staggered as if he had been shot, and then darted forward; but the carriage had already started, and in a few minutes turned and was lost to sight, leaving the pursuer panting in the middle of the road.

* * * * * * * * *

The peasant girl—a peasant girl no longer—lay where her maid had left her, a lifeless form of beauty, robed in white, her face calm and placid now.

The first fainting fit had given place to a deathlike swoon in which she lay as lifeless as a corpse, save for the gentle heaving of the white bosom, and the throbbing sigh that rent her perfect form.

And beside her—not Mephistopheles in costume only, but the Mephistopheles in heart—stood the strange being who loved her.

Two wax candles shed a soft light on the strangely constructed room, and threw a flickering gleam around the elegantly furnished room.

Raymond Garton stood looking down upon the pale face, with a face almost as white.

For once in his life his acute brain was at fault.

He was in the dark. What had happened—whence had come the blow that had struck his love to the ground?

His hands clenched savagely and his teeth shut too, tightly, as he turned from the bed and paced with noiseless, tiger footsteps, the soft-carpeted room.

"I must be calm," he muttered. "Heavens, how the plot thickens! So soon! so soon! How these fools rush to—To-morrow, he said, and he will keep his word! To-morrow! eh, to-day! And he outshoot the blind mariner! eh, to-day!" And he outshoot the blind mariner! eh, to-day!" And he outshoot the blind mariner! eh, to-day!"

To Correspondents.

☞ We never answer questions by mail. All addressed to us seeking information will be answered through this column only.

H. B. B., Chicago.—"1. A and B are playing partners at casino against C and D. Two deuces and a four are on the board. A lays an ace on the two deuces and calls five. His partner, B, lays another ace on the four and lays the two on A's pile, building them fives. Can C, by laying a three on the pile so built, make it eight and take it with an '8'? 2. When two piles of any denomination, each composed of smaller cards, are thus laid together, can they be built on, or separated by the opposite party?".....1. No. 2. No.

W. M.—1. If, as you state, the crew of the second boat were aware, before reaching the race, that their opponents' boat was not of the required length, and did not then protest, the judges should not have paid any attention to a protest entered subsequent to the contest, especially if, as you state, the protesting crew themselves rowed the latter boat, on which occasion it was the duty of the judges to have satisfied themselves before starting the race that the competing boats were of the proper length. 2. A loser, according to the judges' decision, by which all bets are governed.

KUNKLE.—The children of persons duly naturalized, being minors at that time, will, if dwelling in the United States, be deemed citizens. If any alien shall die after his declaration, and before actual admission as a citizen, his widow and children will be deemed citizens. See Kent's Commentaries (2d vol.), 64, 66, laws of U. S., 1804, chap. 47.

BILLIARD MAN, Bloomington, Ill.—"1. At Casino, 4 deals and turns in six, ace and two sevens; 8 plays a six on the six to stack; A has seven, can he take one of the sixes and the ace to make seven? 2. If the nine is on the table, can A play the ace on it and make it tens so that B, who holds an ace and nine, cannot take either?".....1. A cannot do so. 2. B cannot do so.

GRUBBY, Norwich, Conn.—1. In January, 1868, a forfeit of $10 a side was staked for a match between Ned O'Baldwin and Tom Allen, but it was done without the knowledge or consent of the latter, and as he refused to go on with it, O'Baldwin received forfeit. 2. A full account of the matter appeared in the CLIPPER at that time.

DANIEL C., Boston.—The fastest mile time by a pedestrian on record, at one start, is 4 min. 17¼ sec., by Lang and Richards, in a dead heat. Lang ran the Newmarket mile in 4 min. 18sec., but as it was partly down hill it does not go on record against 4:17¾, and the record decides all bets unless otherwise previously provided.

FRITZ, Detroit.—1. Tom Pratt, now in the Athletic nine, is the old Atlantic player of 1864, 5 and 6. He is out of practice as a pitcher, but he is still effective. 2. No; the Chicago nine had. 3. Yes, you can get photographs of players at Peck and Snyder, 126 Nassau street, N. Y.

ATHLETIC TOUR.—1. A foul ball first striking the batsman and then being caught by the catcher off the batsman's person does not put the striker out. 2. The best ten you could get together would be the best to harmonize with each other. 3. The Eckfords are not legal contestants. 4. Chicago at present.

CLEVELAND.—Ed. James can send you imperial sized photographs of the Paris, Taylor-Winship, Renforth, Bigtin-Coulter, Prior and Barton crews. Also, $6 for the set of six, or $1 50 each for any of the other styles of the above-named crews to be had, and none at all of the Ward Brothers. You can address Mr. James as directed in his advertisement.

J. C., Brooklyn.—1. Philadelphia contains many more dwelling houses than New York, though the population is much less. 2 The fight between Hollywood and Keating, which took place at Gravesend, L. I., in 1864, ended in a draw.

CASINO, Memphis, Tenn.—1. He cannot count the cards during the game. 2. Casino is a game of Italian origin. 3. Four cards at a time must be dealt. 4. It counts a sweep. 5. The American Hoyle, (for certain games) in this country.

MUSICAL.—1. A player can have two or more builds on the board at the same time. 2. He is not obliged to take up his first before building a second time. 3. Yes. 4. One deal of the entire pack in this city is the game. In some localities 21 points.

W. E. H., Paris, Ky.—1. You can build as many piles as you like, provided you hold the cards to take them. 2. You cannot do so. ☞. Yes, by Goldsmith Maid. 4. You cannot make a second build by using any of the cards which formed the first build.

CLIFTON HOUSE, Niagara.—A man makes all that he earns when he works for wages, and in trade, his net profits, after deducting expenses incidental to the business. What a man spends has nothing to do with the matter.

MCB., Milton, Del.—The price of tobacco varies so much because of quality, condition, etc., that it is impossible to give a precise idea of value. An experienced tobacconist, W. E. Smith, has written you, however, whose address is left with us, and he can give it.

C. C., Niagara.—One hundred yards in 9¾ seconds, by G. Seward; 200 yards in 19¼ seconds, by both Seward and Weathall; 440 yards in 48¾ seconds, by H. A. Reed; 1 mile in 4:17¾, by Bill Lang in the Hill Richards dead heat.

H. A. B., Baltimore.—1. Two sixes and three trays count eighteen at cribbage, viz., ten for fifteens, two for a pair and six for pair-royal. 2. A nine and three trays count twelve—six for fifteens and six for pair-royal.

A. P. S., Westfield, MASS.—On their first production "Humpty Dumpty" had a larger run than the "Black Crook," the former having been acted 488 times, while the latter was performed 474 times.

WARNER, Rockford Ill.—The Rockfords have played four games with the Chicagos since Hastings was legally enabled to play, of which they have won two. Having lost one before they had a legal nine, the Chicago nine are entitled to the series.

J. T., Plattsburgh.—Playing euchre with a blank card is a senseless innovation on the regular game, and if you play it you must agree upon the rules governing it, as there are none generally recognized in existence.

HIRAM KEYES, Oneida.—1. He is perfectly reliable. If he received the money the articles ordered were sent or the money returned. 2. Yes. 3. We don't think anything about it. 4. He is traveling with T. J. Herndon's company.

MCB., Milton, Del.—The quickest time in which the St. Leger has been run over the present course is 3min. 16sec., by Sir Tatton Sykes in 1846. Caller Ou in 1801 ran it in 3:16⅝, and Lord Clifden in 1863 in 3:17¼.

J. R. R.—No stipulation to the contrary having been made, custom governs and the jump must be on the level. 2. If such a foolish agreement was entered into as that A must be present or it is no jump, he can not win. 3. Yes; it remains in pool.

A. B., Worcester.—Davies's fastest record was made at Buffalo.

R. M. B., Terre Haute, Ind.—Send full address in this office.

WOODEN NUTMEG.—Your question requires time to answer.

BISHOP, Bangor, Me.—Send your full address to this office.

R. W., Boston.—At bluff dice, three deuces beat three aces.

VETERAN PROFESSIONALS.

When the great John Kemble took farewell of the stage he said something about "that decent interval" between the boards and the grave which it was his desire to realize; and he did realize it in his several years' calm and dignified retirement in Switzerland. But even at the date of Kemble's quitting the theatre he was by no means an old man—considerably the junior of many actors who have continued in harness, and with powers much less deteriorated than theirs. Notwithstanding, he was not the man he had been; he had perception to see this, and good sense to act upon it. He was, besides, a man of very correct principle, and, no doubt, recognized the moral propriety of what he urged. Then, again, he might have been anxious for his good standing in the memories of those he would leave behind. This he could not have expected had he qualified the memory of his consummate displays with that of his necessarily imperfect ones.

We have always believed in the good policy of retirement from the stage at a proper age. Let it not, however, be understood that, for this reason, we obstinately shut out the fact that many of our professionals retain their powers long after they themselves have passed into the autumn of life, and by the aid of art manage to appear comparatively youthful. But these are exceptions to the rule, and are far from illustrating the rule itself—most of our sexagenarian and even older actors and actresses who persist in keeping before their patrons, and showing in youthful guise, only burlesquing the scene and disgusting the audience.

In New York there have been numerous examples of this of late years. Professionals who have outlived their prime more than twenty years have re-appeared in their old parts, and friendly critics have exulted over the occasion, and written a vast amount of nonsense about the hypothetical rejuvenation that causes sixty or sixty-five years to pass for twenty-five, or thirty at most. We had a striking evidence of this, some years since, when the late Mr. James W. Wallack, then past his sixth decade, went through the range of characters he had personated with propriety in his younger days, though with a failure in effect then that must have been manifest to all who had known him in the two eras of his career as an actor, and the deep regret, besides, of those who were his best friends.

Jumping an interval and bringing ourselves to times present, we behold a striking evidence of acting beyond the proper date—in the person of Mr. Charles Mathews, announced at Wallack's; at Booth's in that of Miss Charlotte Cushman; with the addition that the latter suddenly breaks on us after an absence of ten years, and so strengthens the contrast between what she was and what she is. We witnessed her impersonation of Queen Katherine a few nights since, and were forced to confess that it was not the Queen Katherine of long ago. Even admitting that the actress had never been absent from us, the difference would have been painful enough; how painful must it have been, then, under the circumstances recorded! Faded looks, a weakened physique, a loss of mental power, too—these were the drawbacks from a performance that once was magnificent—these, the tokens that the time had come for Charlotte Cushman, whilom the greatest actress of her day, to realize that "decent interval," of which her illustrious brother in art made mention more than fifty years ago.

The case of Mr. Charles Mathews, engaged at Wallack's, is somewhat similar to that of Miss Cushman. Here we have another veteran professional assuming the characters of comparative youth, and at the first blush it might be considered successfully; but let us look a little closer and listen a little more attentively, and the illusion is dispelled. Art may do much; it has done very much for the actor in question; but there are times (and they come frequently in the course of an evening's performance) which tell the tale of sixty-nine years, and of the waste common to them.

We do not desire to see the stage recruited by young persons alone. That would never do. There are characters of age to be represented. These, let our veterans, male or female, portray, just like the late George Holland and Mrs. Vernon adhered exclusively to the specialties not suited to their youth, but to their age. Than this actor and actress we never had any more capable; they showed their good sense, however, by attempting on the stage only what they could succeed in.

The fault we have thus briefly adverted is as common to English as to American theatres. Thus we sometimes have our Romeos and our Queen Katharines of sixty, our Captain Absolutes, who amble, and our Lydia Languishes, with wrinkles. This would not be the case in either place were audiences more critical than they are, and critics themselves more up to the proper mark. The continuance of the custom is to be deplored—first, from the disappointment it inflicts on audiences exclusively of the current date; secondly, from the mixed or qualified impression of once eminent professionals it leaves on the minds of people who have known them in the season of their true triumph as well as in that of their melancholy failure.

LOOK OUT.—Treasurers, managers, and other parties having charge of monies taken in at places of amusement, must be on their guard, or they will find themselves minus the evening's receipts some fine morning. In our dramatic summary may be found an account of the robbery of Mr. Hemphill, manager of the Walnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia, some adroit thief snatching the money satchel from the hands of Mr. H. while riding in a passenger railway car and making his escape with the booty, although immediate pursuit was given. Having proved to be so successful in this instance, a like or similar little game may be tried on others; so let our friends be on the alert against surprise.

THE BASE BALL CHAMPIONSHIP.—Although our professional base ball friends are nearing the end of their "grand rounds" and the season is drawing to a close, the championship question remains in a state of uncertainty, and it looks to us as though the championship committee, as a court of appeals, will have to decide the problem, several questions and disputes having arisen during the season which will require the adjudication of that tribunal. The Chicago, Athletic and Boston nines are at the fore, and on one of these the honors will probably be conferred.

LIVELY TIMES in political circles just now. The two parties having made their state nominations, the bone and sinew are called upon to ratify the same. The workers, the men and boys who do the shouting, and knock down and drag out malcontents, are wondering if the equiv. will be forthcoming, seeing that "things is checkered" here in New York.

THE LATEST CLAIM for divorce is said to be that of a man in Indianapolis, who charges that "when he married his wife, four weeks ago, her hair was black; whereas it is now a brilliant red." We cannot see that the gentleman has any just cause of complaint, for when he took her for better or for worse didn't he run the hazard of the dye?

STUMP ORATORS, during a political campaign, remind us of a certain class of people when extremely hard up, since they are always "pledging;" while their auditors resemble reformed inebriates, seeing that they are so willing to "take the pledge."

A PARTY who runs a fashionable segar store in this city advertised a few days ago for "strippers." "Our Jim," who doesn't always get the hang of things, wonders if the man is going into the model artist business.

"HEELERS" are greatly in demand just now. Shoemakers are advertising for them every day, but without avail, for politicians pay much better than cordwainers for such hands.

"OUR JIM" is struck with the fact that the Chinese in California work for such pittances. He says it's no wonder there's so many "broken Chinas" out there.

SIXTEEN PERSONS are announced to "lecture on the Yo Semite" this winter. Are'nt they afraid of taking cold?

DEATH'S DOINGS.

Weekly Record of the Decease of Prominent Individuals.

COMPILED EXPRESSLY FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

BURROUGHS, Samuel.—A prominent resident of Providence—died while leading the prayer of the congregation in church—Providence, R. I., Oct. 3d.

HAMMILL, L. W.—Late publisher of the Sainsbury (Mich.) Scorcher and a member of the 1st Michigan Cavalry—committed suicide through family infelicities. Coral, Mich., Sept. 24th.

CAMPBELL, William.—A prominent Williamsburgher, and lawyer by profession—committed suicide by taking a dose of laudanum—the behavior of his wife on the occasion of a recent fire in Charlestown, Mass., was burned on Oct. 6th, and Miss Ada B. Ross lost her life in the flames. The property destroyed is valued at over $100,000.

GORDON, The Rev. John W.—A distinguished minister of the united presbyterian church, and well known in Chicago—died of paralysis, St. Louis Mineral Springs, Mich., about Sept. 30th.

CAMPS, Lieut. Col. William.—Late Lieutenant Governor of Hong Kong, who, more than fifty years ago, took part in an East Indian campaign—England, recently.

DUNN, John C.—Postmaster of Pittsburgh under President Buchanan, and long connected with various newspapers in the above city—Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 5th.

DAKIN, George K.—First Lieutenant of the Fourth Regiment, U. S. Army; enlisted in the First Massachusetts Battery in 1861, rose to the rank of captain, served with distinction until the close of the war, and subsequently appointed a lieutenant in the regular army in 1866—died of yellow fever, Key West, Fla., Sept. 21st.

DUNLOP, Lieut.—Of the Royal (British) Engineers—run over and killed by a train of cars, Saltbrigan, Dublin, Ireland, Sept. 20th.

ATHLETIC vs. HAYMAKERS.

SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE CLIPPER.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 9, 1871.

The third game of the championship series between the Athletics and the Haymakers was played this afternoon on the former's grounds, in the presence of about two thousand spectators. The game was a very slow one, poorly played one.

The Haymakers only earned two runs, while the Athletics earned 8 runs out of 9 made in the fourth, fifth and seventh innings. The darkness put a conclusion to the game at the end of the 8th innings. The score:—

MUTUAL vs. BOSTON.

These clubs were to have played their fifth championship game together in Brooklyn on Oct. 9th, but owing to the request of the Boston Club that the deciding game be played in Boston, it was agreed in writing that the game of Monday should be an exhibition contest. The fact was fully advertised by the Boston Club in the local papers here, but it was not known until too late to be sent to the papers by the Mutuals to that effect and the result was that the latter papers were led to announce the contest as the deciding game, and the result was a large attendance of spectators. Fortunately the game proved to be a free display and an interesting contest, the result being a creditable victory for Boston. The betting was 100 to 80 on the Mutuals, and hence plenty of money changed hands.

THE GAME.

Play was called at 3:10 P. M., with the Bostons at the bat, and their first three strikes gave easy chances for their retirement in succession. The Mutuals then opened with a first-base hit, but the next three were easily disposed of for a blank.

In the second innings the Reds made one base hit and drew another blank, the Mutuals following suit, one first-base hit being made on each side in the two innings.

In the third innings Harry Wright hit a beauty for first base, and by careless throwing in he got his second, and by Hatfield's muff by third, Geo. Wright's hit sending him in. It was the only run scored, as the next players were put out. On the Mutual side they drew their third blank, leaving the Bostons in the van by a score of 1 to 0.

In the fourth innings, after the two first strikers had been put out, Spalding hit safely for his first, and he was sent home by Gould's three baser to right field. By a pretty play of Mills and Ferguson, Gould was captured at third, Start and Mills being on to earned bases. This left the total at 2 to 1 in favor of Boston, with the game in quite an interesting position.

In the 5th innings the Reds, after escaping a whitewashing by a bad muff of Hatfield's, run up a score of 3 runs, Geo. Wright dropped by Birdsall, hitting safe crushers. On the Mutual side, but for a bad muff by Barrow, they would have been whitewashed.

As it was they only scored one run.

The sixth innings yielded no hitting to the Boston score, and the result would have been similar on the other side but for a low throw out of Geo. Wright's and a muff by Gould; by these errors and Ferguson's good hit one run was scored. This closed the sixth innings with the totals at 3 to 2 only, the Mutuals playing up-hill.

In the seventh innings the Bostons batted well and added two runs to their score. Barnes, Birdsall and Spalding hitting safely for their bases. In this innings the Mules were whitewashed for the fourth time.

The eighth innings added another run to the Boston score by the good hits of the two Wrights, as the Mutuals were again blanked, chiefly by the splendid fielding of Barnes. The Bostons went into their last innings with the totals at 5 to 3 in their favor.

In this innings the Bostons retired in succession, and as the Mutuals were also whitewashed, the result was the defeat of the New Yorkers by a score of 5 to 3, as the several details of the series. The decisive game is to be played in Boston. The score:—

STAR vs ÆTNA.

The noted Ætna club, of Chicago, arrived in the metropolis on Friday night, flushed with their success in the Quaker City, where they had trimmed over the two crack amateur clubs of Philadelphia, they had trimmed over the two crack amateur clubs of Philadelphia, by scores of 23 to 11 and 29 to 5. They would have added a third victory at Trenton to their list had not rain prevented a meeting. On Saturday, October 7th, they visited the Capitoline grounds, Brooklyn, and there played their return game with the Stars, and though comparatively little notice had been given of the match the attendance was numerous, a close and exciting contest being anticipated, not only because of the success of the Ætnas in Philadelphia, but also from the small score of the first game in Chicago, in which the Stars were victors by the totals of 4 to 3 only. The result of the last contest was a great disappointment to the friends of the Ætnas, and an agreeable surprise to the Stars, for they defeated their opponents with ease by a score of 22 to 4, the Stars out fielding and out batting their western adversaries from the start.

The game opened with a score of 3 to 1 in favor of the Brooklyn nine, and at the close of the third innings the score stood at 14 to 2 with the Stars having a victory assured them in advance. After the fourth innings they retired their opponents and disposed of the wards the Stars added eight runs to their score and disposed of the Ætnas in the last six innings for two runs. Cummings not only pitched with more than his accustomed effect, but he was finely supported, especially by his catcher, Barlow, who bore off the palm in fielding on the Star side. On the other hand the Stars found little difficulty in punishing Read's pitching, and as he was badly supported in a majority of the innings, their task of scoring runs was rendered comparatively easy. Taylor and Quinn also playing their positions successfully on the Ætna side. At the bat Taylor and O'Loughlin took the lead for Chicago, and Reavens and Jackson on the Star side. The game was impartially umpired by Mr. Burdock, of the Atlantics. This victory gives the championship of the amateur clubs for 1871 to the Stars, the Ætnas being the strongest amateur nine outside of Brooklyn. The score:—

THE CHAMPIONSHIP RECORD.

The contest for the United States "whip pennant" is rapidly drawing to a close. Already the contestants in the arena have been eliminated to three, viz.:—the Athletic, Boston and Chicago clubs, the latter thus far having the best position, the Athletics being second and the Bostons third, according to Mr. Young's estimate.

Below we give the record of all the games played by each of the ten contesting clubs in the championship arena, including regular games of the match series, and what have been called "exhibition" games. This list includes the regular and illegal contests:—

| | Athletic | Boston | Chicago | Cleveland | Rockford | Haymaker | Keokuck | Mutual | Olympic | Rockford | Games Won |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Athletic | | 1 | 2 | 1 | 3 | 3 | 3 | 2 | 3 | 3 | 21 |
| Boston | 2 | | 3 | 1 | 2 | 3 | 2 | 0 | 4 | 3 | 20 |
| Chicago | 1 | 2 | | 2 | 3 | 3 | 3 | 2 | 3 | 3 | 22 |
| Cleveland | 2 | 2 | 1 | | 3 | 3 | 3 | 2 | 3 | 3 | 22 |
| Rockford | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | | 1 | 1 | 0 | 1 | 1 | 4 |
| Haymaker | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 2 | | 2 | 0 | 2 | 2 | 8 |
| Keokuck | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 2 | 1 | | 0 | 2 | 2 | 7 |
| Mutual | 1 | 2 | 1 | 1 | 3 | 3 | 3 | | 3 | 3 | 20 |
| Olympic | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 2 | 1 | 1 | 0 | | 2 | 6 |
| Rockford | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 2 | 1 | 1 | 0 | 1 | | 5 |
| Games lost | 7 | 10 | 5 | 5 | 22 | 18 | 19 | 6 | 22 | 22 | 155 |

In the above list it will be seen that the Athletic, Boston and Chicago clubs have each won 24 games, but the Boston nine have lost the fewest, the Athletics the next, and the Chicago nine the most of the three clubs. Below is the record of the local games won and lost by the eight clubs who, in all probability, will alone be counted in as local contestants, in this record the games of the Rockford and Keokuck clubs are left out, as also all the games forfeited by the Olympic and Rockford clubs from their playing Hall and Hastings.

| | Athletic | Boston | Chicago | Cleveland | Haymaker | Mutual | Rockford | Games Won |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Athletic | | 1 | 2 | 1 | 3 | 3 | 3 | 13 |
| Boston | 2 | | 3 | 1 | 2 | 3 | 3 | 14 |
| Chicago | 1 | 2 | | 2 | 3 | 3 | 3 | 14 |
| Cleveland | 2 | 2 | 1 | | 3 | 3 | 3 | 14 |
| Haymaker | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | | 2 | 2 | 4 |
| Mutual | 1 | 2 | 1 | 1 | 3 | | 3 | 11 |
| Rockford | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 2 | 1 | | 3 |
| Games Lost | 6 | 7 | 7 | 5 | 16 | 12 | 14 | 67 |

The above records include games only which were played before Oct. 9th, as do not include the Boston and Mutual match of Oct. 9th, and the Haymaker and Athletic match. According to a communication from Mr. Young, the championship committee propose to give the whip pennant to the club winning the most and losing the fewest of the match games played during the series, settling the question for the best three out of five. By this rule, if a club wins their three games in succession, only three games are counted; if they lose one before winning the three, four games are to be played, and if they lose two before winning the three, then five games count. If they lose four, however, should the Athletics win their game of Oct. 9th with the Haymakers, they will have completed their record and have played 22 games, against each of the Chicago and Boston nine, and have won 20 games in succession, they will therefore be 20 ahead of their record in 37 games, and the Chicago nine 18 ahead in 36. Thus far, according to our estimate, Boston is up to Oct. 9th, has won 24 games out of 37, and has lost 13 out of 37. Chicago has won 24 out of 37, and has lost 13 out of 37. In the games, Chicago has lost 8 out of 37, Philadelphia 7 out of 37, and Boston 9 out of 37. At the very best the championship committee will have a very difficult task to perform to determine the winning club, and, in view of the position of the question, we are sorry to the president of the National Professional Association to call a special meeting of the association to take action upon whatever report the championship committee may make.

SCORING VS. CLIPPER.—The following is the match played at Ilion, N. Y., on Sept. 29th, between the Rckford and Clipper Clubs. We give the score by innings:—

Umpire—Mr. A. Bird, Utica City Base Ball Club. Time of Game—Two hours and ten minutes.

ATHLETIC vs. EXPERT.

The fourth game between the Athletics and Experts, of Philadelphia, played on Saturday, the 7th inst., was witnessed by about two hundred spectators. Both clubs were short handed, Malone and Sensenderfer being the absentees on behalf of the Athletics, while O'Brien and Abell, of the Experts, did not put in an appearance. Frost pitched for the Athletics, and his needless passed pitching being well supported, the Experts were retired for six runs, two of which were earned. Cuthbert caught the first five innings and Radcliff the last four innings, and each played finely in their different positions. McBride made a good catch at centre field, and, by a fine throw to first base, succeeded in making a double play. Berthel made the best catch of the game, a backward running one, and also a clever pitching of Worrall proved very effective in handing down the score of the Athletics. The following was the score of this fine game:—

THE VILLA NOVA CLUB RECORD.

This Philadelphia club presents the following creditable record of its games since July 8th, 1871:—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Atlantic, Wilmington | 5—6 | Eureka, Taylorsville | 7—15 |
| Atlantic, Wilmington | 18—33 | Quickstep, Lambertville | 10—15 |
| Dr. Smith, Westchester | 11—13 | Young Eutual | 5—18 |
| Dr. Smith, Westchester | 1— 2 | Manch Chunk B. B. C | 16—53 |
| Sir Isaac Newton, Media | 0— 9 | Pastime, Easton | 4 |
| Edge Hill, Merchantsville | 9— 9 | Pastime, Easton | 8—10 |
| Keystone, Camden | 0— 9 | Reindeer, Branchtown | 7—11 |
| Utica, Titusville, N. J | 12—38 | Enterprise, Philadelphia | 10—36 |
| Utica, Titusville, N. J | 21—28 | Enterprise, Philadelphia | 7—37 |
| Eureka, Taylorsville | 16—46 | | |

It will be thus seen that they have played nineteen match games, one of which was a tie, being victorious in all. They have also played several picked nines, losing their first and only game with a picked nine of Media. They scored in these games 381 runs to their opponents' 165—an average to a game of 20-1 to their opponents' 8-13.

SHORT STOPS.

On Sept. 25th the Wallie Stocktons and Mutuals, composed of members of the 18th U. S. Infantry, played a game at Newberry, S. C., the former scoring 47 to 17.——The Lafayettes defeated the Vallejos at San Francisco, Cal., on Sept. 23d, by a score of 15 to 12.——On Sunday, Oct. 1st, a number of games were contested at New Orleans, viz.:—The Nine Stars captured the Rough and Ready's by a score of 23 to 15. The Grasshoppers bopped away from the Fashions by a score of 16 to 10. The Rieamonds defeated the Haymakers by a count of 26 to 16. The second nines of the Hopes and Eagles had a bout, in which the latter were vanquished, score, 18 to 14. The short Stops beat the Pelicans, jr., by a score of 31 to 27. The Charmers beat the Lazys; score, 29 to 17. The Dots waxed the second nine of the Lottas; score, 19 to 15. The Southerns played an eight innings game with the Nationals, beating them by a score of 25 to 18. The Creoles and Pelicans played a game of five innings, which resulted in favor of the Creoles; score, 23 to 16. The Atheltes gained the first of a series of games over the Bathes by a score of 12 to 6. The Atlantics and Aloes, two Algerine clubs, played a heavy batting game, which resulted in favor of the Atlantics; score, 33 to 23. The Tigers walloped the Washington, jr.; score, 20 to 3. The Actives beat the Olympics; score, 20 to 10. The Grasshopper, jr., doubled up the Pelican, jr.; 16 to 12. The Capitol, jr., run up 6 runs to the Palmetto's 4. The Lone Star, jr., dished up the R. E. Lee, jr., to the tune of 38 to 19. The Lottas beat the Summer Garden; score, 24 to 22. The Strikers struck the Gaslight for 13 to 10. Mr. C. Buchanan, of the Pelicans, broke his leg while playing in a prize game at the fair grounds against the Crescents.——By an advertisement in another column it will be seen that the Rose Hill Club, of Waterbury, Conn., challenge any junior club in that state to play for the championship, on their grounds. Address S. A. Burtis, Box 883, Waterbury, Conn.——At the fair lately held at Ogdensburg, N. Y., several games were contested. On Oct. 4th, the Maple Citys, of that place, beat the Excelsiors, of Clayton; score, 34 to 13. Next day the Emeralds were defeated by the Pastimes; score, 31 to 16. On Oct. 6th the second nine of the Maple Citys beat the second nine of the Emeralds, scoring 54 to 31.

AID FOR CHICAGO.—The disastrous conflagration which has visited Chicago his past week will have the effect of putting a close to the ball-playing season in that city as far as the playing of any more professional contests is concerned, and in view of the present condition of affairs the Chicago Club had better change their programme so as to play their second-class games with the Haymakers alternately at Troy and Brooklyn. In view also of the disasters which has been occasioned by the dire misfortune which has afflicted the Lake City, and remembering the large sums of money collected in Chicago, it becomes them, one and all, to join hands in arranging a series of benefit performances, the receipts of which should be handed over to the Mayor of Chicago in response to his call for aid for the sufferers from the great fire.

TOUR OF THE HAYMAKERS.—On Friday, Oct. 6th, the Haymakers left Troy upon their last tour this season, playing with the Bostons on Saturday. Returning to Troy, they left again on Sunday evening for Philadelphia, where they were to play the Athletics on Monday. From Philadelphia they go direct to Chicago, and play the White Stockings on Saturday, October 14th, in Chicago. Thence they go to Rockford and play the Forest Citys on Monday, October 16th. They play the Rockford Club a second game on Tuesday, October 17th, at Chicago, returning by way of Cleveland, they stop there and play the Forest Citys, of Cleveland, on Thursday, October 19th. This will end the tour.

PLAYERS ON THE MARKET.—One result of the Chicago calamity will be to throw all the Chicago professionals on the market again, and a decided lowering of the salaries of all. Club managers can now have their pick at quite a discount on the rates of a week ago.

PEDESTRIANISM.

FOUR MILE WALKING CONTEST.

One of the attractions at the Military Festival on the Fashion Course, L. I., on Wednesday, Oct. 4th, was a walking contest, four miles, the contestants being James Smith, Bill Brown alias Young, Weirzell and Clark. The latter was considered certainty for Smith before starting, Brown's friends asking odds of 4 to 1, which the friends of Smith wouldn't give, and consequently nothing was bet. At the send off Weigzell went to the front, and Clark squared for second place, for which he was very properly disqualified, though he continued walking to the close, having reached the quarter pole on the fourth mile when Brown and Smith finished. The latter couple were on even terms for above half a mile, when Brown, whose stride is much longer than Smith's and who walks well obtained the advantage and passed the stand a few feet ahead of Jim. Weigzell still being still in the van. After passing the quarter pole the latter dropped back to second position, and at the half mile was third in the race, Smith being second, while Clark, who never had the ghost of a chance, was left hopelessly in the rear. Brown gained ground inch by inch and foot by foot, and finished the second mile some six yards ahead. Thus they walked for more than half a mile, when the champion began to close on Brown, who came to a stop. Urged on by the latter going by the stand three feet in front. Urged on by the shouts of his partisans, Brown increased his pace, but, after striding splendidly for a few yards, broke into an unmistakable trot, which Pelican, jr.; 16 to 12. The Capitol, jr., run up 6 runs to the Palmetto's 4. The Lone Star, jr., dished up the R. E. Lee, jr., to the tune of 38 to 19. The Lottas beat the Summer Garden; score, 24 to 22. The Strikers struck the Gaslight for 13 to 10. Mr. C. Buchanan, of the Pelicans, broke his leg while playing in a prize game at the fair grounds against the Crescents.——By an advertisement in another column it will be seen that the Rose Hill Club, of Waterbury, Conn., challenge any junior club in that state to play for the championship, on their grounds. Address S. A. Burtis, Box 883, Waterbury, Conn.——At the fair lately held at Ogdensburg, N. Y., several games were contested. On Oct. 4th, the Maple Citys, of that place, beat the Excelsiors, of Clayton; score, 34 to 13. Next day the Emeralds were defeated by the Pastimes; score, 31 to 16. On Oct. 6th the second nine of the Maple Citys beat the second nine of the Emeralds, scoring 54 to 31.

MAN VS. BICYCLE.—The Melbourne Grounds, Northampton, Eng., were well patronized on Sept. 16th, to witness the match between G. Hazael (the Ten Mile Pedestrian Champion of England) and J. T. Johnson (the long distance Champion Bicyclist), who were matched as follows:—Hazael to run seven and a half miles while Johnson rode a bicycle 10 miles round the ground, for £25 a side. The performances, etc., of the men are so well known that it will be unnecessary to repeat them. At 4.30 P. M. the men appeared on the ground, Hazael attended by his monitor, R. Lewis, and looking in fine form, as well as his opponent, Johnson, who was attended by Cooper's Billy, of Birmingham. In order to complete the distance, Hazael had to traverse the ground 27 times and Johnson 86, the course being 365 yards around. They were sent away to a good start, and the bicyclist passed his man in the 3d, 6th, 10th, 15th, 18th, 20th, 24th, 28th, 32d, 36th, 40th, and 45th laps, and various were the conjectures as to whether he would again catch the pedestrian; had he done so, it would have placed them on level terms. All doubts, however, were quickly set at rest, for, on turning at the bottom end, and going at a rapid pace, he came to grief, being then 30 yards behind Hazael in the latter's last lap. Although some 30 yards behind Hazael in the latter's last lap. Although Johnson quickly remounted, the advantage gained by Hazael was too much, for Johnson was unable to close up the gap, and Hazael won by some 20 yards, having covered the distance of seven and a half miles in 29 min. 6sec. Johnson's time for 10 miles was 29min. 14sec. The betting was slightly in favor of Johnson, 5 and 6 to 4 being laid. Mr. Collier was referee and timekeeper.

SMITH VS. KILLSEYDE.—The match between James Smith, champion, and Miles Killseyde, to walk fifty miles for $100 a side, with a country added by the manager of the military festival, is fixed for decision at the Fashion Course, L. I., on Wednesday, Oct. 11th, the start to be made at 9 o'clock A. M. Both men have been working hard for weeks past to secure proper condition, and though Smith is the favorite, it is confidently expected that Miles will give him a tight pull for it. Indeed, his friends share the confidence he himself exhibits, asserting that if he is beaten he will not be far behind at the finish, and that he stands an exceedingly good chance of reaching the winning post in the van. If the latter should be the case, with the consideration added that Prof. Bill Brown has had with gentlemanly skill to the management of

WHEN THIS NEW COAT GETS OLD.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

BY DR. PIERRE BLANC.

The accompanying lines were suggested and composed on reading in the CLIPPER, of Sep. 16th, a "poetical effusion" by Mr. Lon J. Beauchamp, entitled "When This Old Coat Was New."]

Yes, many are the years that's past
Since this old coat was new,
And many are the changes, love,
That's faded from our view;
But still sweet memory lingers there,
More valued far than gold,
Could we but see the future, love,
When this new coat gets old.

I've been thinking of the future, love,
What it may have in store;
I've been dreaming of the years that's past,
And the happy days of yore;
Whatever joy the future brings,
The past has been "all told."
We'll always take things as they come,
Till this new coat gets old.

When this new coat gets old, my love,
I will worn and faded be,
Like us, perhaps, as on we're tossed
Life's rough and troubled sea;
And though we're worn and faded, love,
We once were young and bold;
Together on life's sea we'll float
Till this new coat gets old.

GABRIELLE.

A PARISIAN EPISODE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,

BY OSCAR BRUCE.

Clark, after having removed the little lady's cloak, as alluded to at the close of the chapter in last issue, addressed her as follows:—

"You say your landlady's name is Madame Rachel?"

"Exactly."

"And her house?"

"Large, with double steps, long piazza, green and gold lamps at the door and iron lions on either side."

"Well I have come one here for you with daybreak," and Mahlon donned his light overcoat and set off with instructions for the district commissaire.

Not until his return did he notice a rather remarkable mistake he had made in his quondam protege. He had supposed she was, and had treated her like a child, but on his return he found her glowing under the influence of the warm coal fire and an extraordinary novelette. He quickly saw his mistake.

The sweetest of all sights is that of a young and innocent girl just budding into early womanhood. Gabrielle's form was plump and ripened, and despite the girlish softness of her face it could be seen at a glance that she had attained that time in life which demands the treatment of a lady. Her complexion was most delicate; it was like the blush of the rose on the cheek of a lily, and contrasted richly with the deep golden tinge of her curling hair. Her merry blue eyes lighted up a face already full of sunshine, her dainty nose was perfection itself, and her lips were full and red, not over sensual, but of a flavor that denoted an affectionate disposition.

As we know, Clark Mahlon was not the best of men. Aspasia's warm arm had more than once clasped his neck, and her crimson tresses had streaked his bosom. But now he stood in perfect subjection to this little creature, whose innocence was a better protector than many would think. It had been years, perhaps, since he had associated with a virtuous woman, and his face flushed with shame in the holy presence of purity. It is such contacts that keep us from the evil effects of bad society, and many a good, kind nature, has been pressed down to the filth of the gutter for simple want of them.

Madame Hermance taxed her best resources to provide a repast fitting to the occasion. A tiny tureen of delicious soup, a morsel of turbot, an elegant omelette, a brace of birds roast on a spit, together with some of Madame's flaky rolls and strong black coffee served to check Gabrielle's keen appetite, and when a dish of candied fruits and bon bons were placed on the table with a tiny glass of mesaport, she chatted merrily about her drives in the Bois, the theatres, the champs and the Jardin, and the Boulevards and all the wonderful wonders of dazzling Paris.

"Do you never eat, my friend?" she inquired suddenly, as if remembering that Mahlon, who stood leaning on the mantlepiece, had not tasted a morsel. "I dined late," he said, with some confusion. "I am not hungry."

"You do not sit down," she exclaimed with much feeling; "is it because I am here. Pray do not mind me."

"Yes, but I do," said Mahlon gently; "let us say nothing about it."

"Surely you are my host," she continued, pleadingly, "and you are a gentleman, are you not?" This is an assertion rather than a question.

"I hardly know," he replied, flushing crimson; "let us not speak of it."

They were very silent. "Ever and anon" Gabrielle would steal a glance at his sad, thoughtful face, and once she thought there was a tear trickling down his cheek. Then she gazed little head began to nod and droop and the merry eyes to blink drowsily.

Out of his reverie Clark started and pulled the bell cord, giving Madame Hermance charge over his sleepy guest. She bade him good night, timidly, and then departed under the charge of the jolly landlady.

When they had gone he seated himself by the fireside and indulged in reflections over his wasted life. These are never tasteful, yet morning came and found the big, strong man, seated still, with his face buried in his hands. The yearning, the better nature was coming to the surface again; the struggle was bitter and painful, yet it was woman's blessed influence, and he felt like a new man.

Suddenly there came a rude, heavy knock at his door, and a moment later he was confronted by Edward Beauchamp. His face was very pale, and the black circles under it were denoted his mental suffering.

"You dastmed dog," he hissed with a great effort, keeping his hands from Mahlon, "give me my sister." Clark was as cool as ice; he never spoke, but looked in his face with unflinching gaze while Beauchamp ranted his abuse.

"Ed," he said quietly, when Beauchamp paused for breath, "I am not surprised that you should have thought this of me. You have seen much of and no profit of me, and it is only natural that you should. I did not know that the lady was your sister, but, as God is my witness, I treated her with as much respect as though I had known it. Not a word or action did I commit that would offend a saint. There she is, coming through the hall with Madame Hermance. Does she look debauched?"

Gabrielle had appeared at the other end of the passageway, looking, what she was, the perfect picture of happiness and innocence.

Beauchamp's face flushed with shame.

"Mahlon," he said in a tremulous voice, "I have deeply insulted you. A simple apology cannot make amends for the wrong I have done you. Can I ask your sincere forgiveness?"

"With all my heart I grant it," said Mahlon, with moist eyes; "let us be friends."

Beauchamp kissed his sister tenderly and then awaited the adjustment of her scarlet cloak.

"Won't you accept this as a remembrance?" said Gabrielle, gently, to Mahlon, at the same time placing a tiny locket in his hand? "I can never forget your kindness."

"Good bye," she said softly, and extended her white hand towards him. For a moment he feared to sell it; then, with an impulse he could not resist, he pressed it to his lips. Beauchamp shook him warmly by the hand and then they departed.

But in the young Englishman's heart there had entered a feeling of brotherly love for the protector of his sister. He knew the escape she had had, for such stray lambs generally prove delicious morsels for wolves in the wilderness of Paris.

* * * * * * *

A year had passed and Clark Mahlon found himself in London. His life, though to a certain extent purposeless, was blameless, and the memory of pretty Gabrielle kept him out of the muck of fast life. He knew that he was following a shadow. He knew that he loved one between whom and himself there lay an insurmountable social barrier.

Suppose, even, that Gabrielle returned his love, what sacrifice could he offer to her family? He held no armorial crest, no patent of long descent or of nobility, and without these his fortune was as dross.

His love was neither obtrusive or selfish. Gabrielle had never seen him since she was under his protection; and her brother Edward being abroad, she never heard of Mahlon's presence in London. Yet he would pause by the mansion in Park lane, and follow her at a distance in the street, now and then gaining precious glances of that face he loved. His passion was not maudlin, he found sufficient time to ride in the parks, attended the theatres and took long and frequent pulls in the river. At home he studied arts and languages, which filled out his time and improved him mentally. Through all this there was but one thought that kept him from more dangerous influences, that thought—Gabrielle.

One day he was standing near her home, and beheld Gabrielle preparing to take her airing, accompanied by a servant in livery.

A heavy sigh burst from his lips, and at the same time a hand touched his shoulder. He turned and with great confusion confronted Edward Beauchamp. His face flamed with the consciousness of detection, and he could only stutter a few words of recognition.

"Mahlon," said Beauchamp, after a few commonplace remarks had been exchanged, "I have verified what I long ago suspected. You love my sister."

Clark felt an equivocal reply coming to his lips, but its utter unmanliness roused him on the instant.

"I do," he replied, "with all my heart and soul. Is it any wonder, when her memory alone has kept me from my old bad ways. But I promise you it shall never annoy her, as I would not cause her the least discomfort for all the treasures of this earth."

"I am glad you have spoken so candidly with me. Did it rest with myself, you should have her for the asking, for I know that a more gentlemanly heart than yours never beat. The poor child has often asked after you and seems to interest herself in your movements."

"Good bless her," said Mahlon, heartily.

"I have been called home," said Beauchamp, "on a matter that I have taken deeply to heart. Can you be at the opera on Tuesday next? If so, I will meet you in the right lobby as the curtain rises. I shall then tell you what so deeply oppresses me."

"I will be there," said Clark, "and so farewell."

"No, only au revoir," replied Beauchamp, walking rapidly away.

On the Tuesday night following, agreeable to appointment, Clark Mahlon was in attendance at the Covent Garden, and as the gong strobe announced the rise of the curtain, he retired to the right lobby to meet Banchamp. Mahlon would not have known him at sight, had he not announced himself, as he was most effectually disguised. His naturally florid complexion was powdered to a tawny brown, and a moustache and whiskers adorned his otherwise smooth face.

"I am supposed to be in Manchester," he said, in explanation, "and it does not suit to have any one see me here."

The theatre was crowded from top to bottom with a usual opera going London audience. "Un Ballo" was the presentation, and during the prima's first solo they noiselessly entered the theatre.

"Look at the third box to the right," said Beauchamp in a sharp, quick whisper; and Mahlon did as directed.

Gabrielle, her father and mother, were seated together with the same decrepit old man, whom he had seen abandoning after them in Paris. Gabrielle looked thin, pale and careworn, and her thoughts seemed fixed on something foreign to the performance.

"Well," said Mahlon, shortly.

"That old man is Gabrielle's intended husband."

Clark started in affright. These marriages of convenience were new to him, and he could hardly understand it.

"You don't mean to tell me—"

"His name is Lord Sherville. His estates join father's in Hertfordshire, and they are thus to be united."

"And is her happiness to be sacrificed to such a sordid contract?"

"Such instances are anything but rare in England."

"Oh, heaven! monstrous. And you will submit to this?"

"That rests with you."

"With me?"

"Listen! I love my sister as my right arm. Now I know she cherishes your recollection, and that you would be a good, kind husband to her. Will you carry her away?"

"When?"

"This very night. Not a moment is to be lost."

"But Gabrielle!"

"Has consented; the plan is laid and waits execution. You have three hours to prepare, and at the close of the opera I will see that she is separated from the others. You can be in Gretna Green before they fairly get on the track, and then it is done. Have you determined?"

"Can you doubt it? Why I would face all the world to save her from such a fate."

"Good bye and God speed." Thus they parted.

The opera was over, the shrill cry of the caller and the rumbling of carriages mingled with the rich rustling of silks and satins, and the merry laughter of those passing from the theatre.

Gabrielle stood with her face covered by a heavy cloak, shivering with excitement. Just for a moment she stood alone, then a strong arm gently clasped her waist.

"Will you go with me Gabrielle?" said a low voice.

"To the end of the world, darling?" and it was finished.

In a few short weeks Clark Mahlen was crossing the Atlantic with his prize. She had written a long letter to her father and mother, not asking forgiveness, but telling them that they were to blame in the matter, which, however, she would never regret, as she had the best husband in the world. Edward Beauchamp's connection in the matter was never known. He is an officer in the navy, and frequently pays visits to Mr. Mahlon and his pretty wife at their home in Gotham.

THE END.

"WANTED, ONE HUNDRED BALLET LADIES; APPLY AT THE STAGE DOOR."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

On the eve of producing a spectacular play I caused the above advertisement to be duly inserted in the newspapers, according to the time honored theatrical custom, when in want of from ten to twenty ballet girls, always to advertise for one hundred. By so doing I gain a double advantage; in the first place the advertisement has an imposing look, as it catches the theatre going public's eye, neatly hinting at the large array of female loveliness to be expected in the forthcoming piece; secondly, it gives you a chance to select ad libitum your ten or twenty ladies from the shoal of applicants who rally at the summons, besieging the stage door and clamoring loudly there to see the stage manager. So I sat patiently within my sanctum sanctorum awaiting the rush.

A tap at my office door, and my stage door keeper announces a batch of sylphs in attendance. I rise and follow, and soon stand in the presence of four; I bow, and one of them boldly advances.

"The manager?"

"Yes." She bows in turn, and smiles sweetly. It is evident she has come determined to achieve success. Her chignon is stunning; her dress and hat, both of the cheapest kind, look, nevertheless, quite dashing, and her whole appearance shows me at a glance, "the experienced ballet girl."

"You advertised for ladies; I don't want you to look upon me as a common ballet girl (with a depreciating glance over her shoulder at the others); I've never gone on in the dramatic ballets; I've always belonged to the dancing ballet. Have you engaged all your second and third dancers, sir?"

"Yes."

"Oh, I'm sorry; I was in hopes of getting a position in that way. Monsieur Gemrowskabina recommends me as quite capable; however, I'm willing to engage as a first class coryphee; what salary do you pay your coryphees?"

I named the weekly sum.

"Oh, good gracious, why I've been offered double that to go to Boston; but I don't care to leave the city at present."

A pause ensues, and she looks down and twirls her parasol.

"Where have you danced?"

"I danced in the 'Twelve Temptations,' and I had an offer from there to go——"

"Well," I ask, hastily interrupting her, "if you accept the terms I name I will engage you."

"Well, I don't know. Do you expect the piece to have a long run?"

"I name the hoped for time."

"By-the-way, sir, do you pay for rehearsals?"

"Yes, half salary."

"Oh, dear; well, I don't know, provided I'm put in the front line and don't have much to find."

"We furnish the dresses for the ladies."

"Well, I think I'd like to engage."

"Very good; the first rehearsal on the 22d. Good morning."

And now a sylph of about seventeen, urged on by a sylph of about forty, advances; sisters evidently, and a third fay keeping a little in the back ground, age difficult to decide; horrible squint very apparent; pest, and on the defensive.

"We would like to engage," says the youngest; "my sister and Miss Julia De Forest, a friend of ours."

"Where have you danced?"

"In Memphis, at a first class variety theatre; we have our specialities, and all dance together, jigs, hornpipes, and walk arounds, and we never danced without an encore; did we, Tilly?"

"Ah, that's not the style of dancing I require. Ours will be a fairy ballet."

"Well, I guess we can do fairy business, if we have a mind," interposed the squinting fairy, now advancing in her turn. A presentiment seized me (we all have our presentiments) that this bayadere's "legs were queer," and with some difficulty, and further parley, I dismissed the trio.

The door had barely closed with a loud bang after them, when it was gently opened again, and a modest, slight figured woman, appeared on the threshold, who advanced with some hesitation, and, was it possible? limping! Yes, for as the lame lady came full in view I saw, too, she supported herself on a crutch. I checked an involuntary smile as she gently drew her veil aside, and enquired in a sweet voice:—

"Are you the manager, sir?"

"I bowed assent."

"I saw an advertisement for ladies for the ballet."

Good gracious. In all my theatrical experience this was the first lame applicant I had ever encountered, and I was a little curious to hear what she proposed to be engaged for, saying, with some hesitation, "you are not aware, probably, we require our ladies to dance?" A painful blush suffused her face, and it was one of the loveliest faces I had ever seen.

"I know I'm not capable of that; but, sir, I presume you have a transformation or last grand scene?"

"We have, madame."

"I hoped, sir, that, overlooking my infirmity, you would be so good, that is to say I trusted I could induce you to engage me for that alone, to stand in a tableau."

In an instant she had removed her bonnet, and timidly loosened her hair, which fell in a glorious golden shower over her shoulders, and not dyed either, I could swear, for it glistened and sparkled again, and as she stood with eyes modestly cast down, she formed a pretty tableau herself; and that mute appeal, who could resist it? And when I had spoken a few complimentary words, and assured her she should personate Aurora in the final scene, and named the weekly sum I deemed fair for this real attraction, her eyes glistened and her countenance brightened, and I knew as well as if she had told me, the stipulated dollars in her near distant prospective were a bread for those at home. With a few modest words of thanks, and with a joyous heart, I knew, she disappeared.

I had barely reached my office when I was again summoned by the stage door keeper, and I fancied I discerned an unwonted smirk upon his face as he announced:—"A lady, sir, for the ballet," and presently I stood in the presence of a fat woman, weight about one hundred and ninety pounds.

"If you please sir, do you do the hiring here?"

"I am the stage manager; yes."

"Well, my old man was reading in the papers that there was a great call here for ladies for to play out upon the stage, and I thought I'd make application for the same."

Useless to attempt to conceal my laughter, which I heard re-echoed by the door-keeper from within his den.

"What can you do, madam?"

"Well, sir, I can do the same as thim girls I saw once in the 'Black Crook' with a pole in their hands, a running round with tin pots on their heads, barrin, I shouldn't like to be showing me bare legs, for it isn't decent, though I've got a good stout pair of my own under me."

"Oh, madam, if you engaged, you would wear tights."

"What?"

"Tights, fleshings."

"Is it drawers you mean? If that's it, I've a good pair of the same."

"And you think you could dance?"

"Is it dance? Yes, can I, and match a jig with any woman in Am-riky."

"Where do you reside?"

"What?"

"Where do you live?"

"In Baxter avenue, beyond Casey's. Top floor, back."

"Very well, madam: should I require your services I'll send for you immediately."

And now applicants came flocking in fast, young and old, pretty and otherwise, fat and scranny, desirable and undesirable; one wouldn't engage unless "my sister is engaged, too;" the sister objectionable in a fairy point of view. One wouldn't engage without a few weeks "pay" in advance, having lost all her wardrobe in a railroad disaster coming from Omaha. One wouldn't engage because Miss Jenkins was; a deadly feud existing, originating during the run of "Humpty Dumpty," relative to a nice young man. One sought an engagement on the strength of her curls; another demanded an engagement and extra terms, coming from a theatrical family, a brother comedian, somewhere out west; others sought engagements on the strength of their dancing ability only; and, being strangers, came prepared, dancing shoes in hand, to give proof of their skill at a moment's notice. But ah, "who have we here?" The atm sphere is redolent of "millefleurs;" as she advances her silk dress rustles, and she beams forth in a very bower of soft tulle, ribbon, lace and glistening gems; she speaks from behind her veil and in a low tone, while, idly dangling a spotless kid glove, she exhibits the whiteness and rounded perfection of a little hand decked with sparkling jewels.

"Ladies for the ballet?"

"Yes!" and she languidly follows and sinks gracefully into one of my office chairs, and, as she raises her veil, now, I see she is at least perfect mistress in the art of making up. She asks several questions, but does not allude with the usual anxiety to the all potent question of salary, and I observe, while she is speaking, she takes an opportunity of letting her rich shawl slide accidentally from one of her shoulders, thus exhibiting a well developed bust; she drops her glove, too, quite by accident, and as she bends forward to recover it her skirts are somehow disarranged, revealing pretty freely a neat foot and ankle, and a momentary glimpse of a superb calf. But, notwithstanding, I find I really have no engagement to offer this lady, and allow her coolly to bow herself out, not a little chagrined. I have no doubt whatever, by her failure, and I heartily wish other managers in like cases would do the same. Having at last concluded all the engagements desirable for that day at least, I was about to depart for the front of the house when I was hailed and informed that there was still another applicant clamoring loudly to see me. Retracing my steps, I saw a dirty, greasy looking Dutch woman, who was unmistakeably soon about to add to the census.

"Well, Madame, what is it?"

"I hafe come round dis blace of amoosement; I hafe seen der pig negs, dot vos in der paper; I vas adhaed to dry to get a situashin, und to dalk mit de gendleman about dis bostishion, und I vants a introducemend to sim."

"Madame, I am the manager."

"Und der bay fah goo?"

"You are anxious to be engaged in the ballet, Madame?"

"Yah, for a good bostishion und fad pay, und I vood be dicksded do."

"Well, Madame, I'm afraid I couldn't offer you sufficient terms to make it worth your while."

"Oh, I gid a chance, I took him."

"But, my dear madame, I have concluded all my engagements," and I fled, seeking refuge in the box office, never doubting that if I remained longer, I should have a "heathen Chinee" applying for an engagement next, and to-morrow I must face a fresh crowd of miscellaneous bayaderes, and it's hard at a glance to tell the true from the false—hard to know which faces will look attractive at night, by gaslight—who are anything but attractive by daylight. It requires some skill to silence the loquacious, to cut short long theatrical histories, to settle various little difficulties—how Miss such an one, for instance, can leave the theatre where now employed in time for rehearsals at ours, without unnecessary loss of time, and, consequently, money to the poor ballet girl; doubtful recommendations to listen to relative "to a friend, a dancer," in Philadelphia, perhaps, to whom I am implored to telegraph. "for I know she would suit you, and she's a beautiful girl and a splendid dancer." Surely a merchant selecting his stock of goods is not more puzzled or perplexed how to best suit the public taste than the stage manager when he advertises for "one hundred ladies for the ballet."

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

WILL YOU?

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

"O, darling one with the golden hair,
In your postage on the hill,
Where the jessamines and the roses are,
When I from your side am gone afar,
Will you love me still?

"O, awkward of sweets, when the night wind sighs,
And frozen is yonder rill,
And I gaze at the stars in the wintry skies,
And fancy I see your dear, bright eyes,
Will you love me still?

"For the seasons will come and the seasons go,
And the frosts run flowers kill;
But in summer's sun and in winter's snow
This, O, my darling, I want to know,
Will you love me still?"

I shall never forget if I live for years
(Even now my pulses thrill)
The tones of her voice—my hopes and fears—
As she said, while she smiled through her falling tears,
"O, you bet I will!" J. H. B.

A FRADULENT FEMALE.

HER NIMBLE FINGER FEATS AND THEIR CONSEQUENCES.

Many years ago, when Barnum's Museum flourished at Ann street and Broadway, the police were burdened with complaints that visitors to that institution were cleverly robbed of their pocket pickpockets, who plied their vocation so successfully that detection seemed impossible. When everybody else had failed, an appeal was made to the late Superintendent (then Sergeant) Jourdan, who, after diligent search, arrested a boy and girl aged twelve years, who, with astonishing expertness, had managed to filch thousands of dollars from the purses of unsuspecting adults. The wary police officer soon traced their antecedents, and found the boy to be Tommy Stack, a now expert "huckster," now undergoing a term of five years in State Prison, and the girl to be the daughter of an old "fence" named Levy, who had served three years in State Prison for receiving stolen goods. This child Sophy, whose beginning in crime dated years prior to her arrest, acted the bravado, and when she was sent by Recorder Hoffmann to the House of Refuge, she told the Recorder to his face that she would not remain there, and true to her word, about a year afterwards she was arrested for pocket picking. Then she was held in the Tombs a long time. While she was there her father and mother were also arrested, and the entire family were in the Tombs at the same time. At the age of fourteen this precocious girl was married to Morry Harris, also a pickpocket, and after she had been sent to the state prison for three years, her husband soon followed her for a longer term of imprisonment. In state prison Mrs. Harris formed the acquaintance of Nell Lyons, another thief, and, discarding Morry Harris, she married Lyons, and has borne him children. Lyons is serving a term of five years.

The late Superintendent Jourdan warned her to quit this city, and during his life she was arrested in Boston and Philadelphia for pocket picking and shoplifting, but she invariably managed to escape punishment. On the decease of the great detective, Superintendent Jourdan, she returned to New York, and about two months ago was arrested for picking the pocket of a gentleman at the Union ferry, but through some unknown influence was released without bail. Again, a week after her release, she was a prisoner in the Tombs, but again her boasted influence was exerted, and she was let loose on the streets. Last Saturday she went with a friend on a marauding expedition, attired in the height of fashion, and majestically swept to the counter of James McCreery's magnificent establishment, asking the salesmen to show her some handkerchiefs. Here she was caught stealing a handsomely embroidered cambric and some handkerchiefs. She was handed over to the police, but they failed to recognize in her the accomplished Sophy Levy, alias Sophy Harris, alias Sophy Lyon, now Susan Lockwood. She kept the secret of her arrest until yesterday. Then, changing her expensive costume for an old calico dress, and covering her face with a shawl, she appeared before Judge Bedford to plead to an indictment for grand larceny. But the City Judge bade her to show her features, and when she did so he recognized the hardened thief. She boasts that she owns a certain assistant alderman, and is confident that through some hocuspocus she can again escape. District Attorney Garvin's attention is called to her boast. The case was on yesterday's calendar in the General Sessions, but was put off on the ground of the prisoner having some witnesses to produce. After this adjournment had been effected the assistant alderman whom she had secured a reduction of Sophy's bail to $1,000, and that she would be liberated. Mr. James McCreery and District Attorney Garvin will probably look into the facts.—N. Y. Sun, Oct. 3d.

INSULTS TO WOMEN.

The following spicy epistle is taken from the Boston Herald, of Sept. 30th, and is worth perusing:—

"Sir,—I have read your paper, in my exalted opinion, are the interesting "Letters from the People." I have been very much interested in the great discussion on "Insults to Ladies," and my wrath must give itself vent or I shall expire. I am so extremely disgusted with the actions of those horrid men that I am determined to live and die an old maid—unless I am fortunate enough to meet with a perfect gentleman! Alas, sir! the days of chivalry are past, the gallant knights are dead, and we have to content ourselves with the ideas of ladies' fancy, my dear sir, of the feelings of a lady are when she has to endure the vulgar staring of strangers and street loafers! O! that the ladies could have the time of Lady Godiva, and get the streets cleared of all males while they condescend to promenade the city, and have all the "peeping Toms" lynched on the spot if caught in the ungallant act of staring at any lady. What an idea, sir! It makes my blood run cold when I think it. A lady cannot walk in the fashion without hearing low remarks about her attire from those nasty men and the grey headed sinners as well. She cannot wear a low-bodied dress without they stare at her bosom; she cannot wear a short dress without they stare at her ankles; she cannot wear nasty boots, high heeled or decorated, without they stare at her feet: she cannot wear the Grecian bend or a bustle without they stare at her back; she cannot wear false curls or a nice chignon without they stare at her head, and she cannot paint her face without they stare at her features. It is really high time that we did something to assert our rights. There has been a great outcry about women's rights. It is time to go in now for ladies' rights. I only wish the government would take the matter in hand, and a law be passed to put out the eyes of all the male portion of the republic who are not already blind, and then we should have a relief from such low vulgarity, and we could dress as we like, do as we like, and act as we like without criticism. You cannot imagine, my dear Mr. Editor, what we ladies have to go through. If we go into a street car and find it crowded, we frequently have to stand the whole of the distance as we wish to go, whilst those loafers occupy the comfortable seats; and if one of them should for a wonder be gallant enough to rise and give place to a lady, he expects to be thanked, for, according to ladies, the privileges which belong to them. The idea of such a thing to hear such low remarks:—"I say, Tom, rather cool that." "Yes, she left her manners home on the piano" What an idea, if a lady must open her mouth to thank a loafer for what she has a right to expect. If a fellow inquires of a lady the nearest way to where he wishes to go he expects her to tell him. The idea! Why don't he ask a policeman, and not make such vulgar inquiries of a lady? If there is none near he ought to walk on until he meets one of his own sex, and not insult a lady with such low remarks. If a lady likes to bolo, or laugh, or romp on the streets, why cannot she do it without attracting more attention than the loafers do? They laugh, joke and do what they like, and no notice is taken of their actions by the passers-by. Why cannot the ladies have the same privilege? That's what I want to know. But I must stop, sir, for I could go on enumerating the insults to which we are subjected until I filled the whole of your paper. But I hope you will continue to "spot" the loafers and "put a head" on them, that we may dress, dress, dress, wear any or joke as they like, without being insulted, and "that's what's the matter." This may sound strong to your ears: but, oh! dear, no! it's our privilege to make use of such expressions without its being considered low or vulgar, when we use them. So "now ish dot for high?" ANGELINA FITZ-SMITH.

MISPLACED CONFIDENCE.

SUICIDE OF AN UNFORTUNATE GIRL.

On the evening of the 3d inst., Coroner Whitehall held an inquest over the body of Susan Hunter, aged twenty-two, who died at 32 Bartlett street, Williamsburgh, L. I., on the morning of Oct. 1st, of a dose of arsenic administered by her own hand. She boarded with one James Kirk and his wife Mary, who live on the second floor of 32 Bartlett street. The only other occupant of the apartments is Kirk's crippled and hunchbacked son John. Kirk earns his living by making rat poison. He kept the arsenic in a large bottle in the closet, and within the reach of any one who might be in the room. Susan Hunter lived with the Kirk family, more or less, for nine years. When only twelve years old she was left an orphan and friendless. She was pretty and attracted many admirers, among them Mr. Thomas Hall, of Hart street, who is wealthy and respectably connected. Hall is about 28 years of age, sports a diamond pin, and has the appearance of an influential ward politician. He frequently visited Susan at her room, and paid her board. On the evening of September 29th, Hall called to see his victim as usual. When he was about taking his leave she noticed a great change in his manner. She clung to him and asked for an explanation. He said he was about to cast her off for another, and thereupon rushed from the room. Susan followed him to the street and implored him to spare her, but he was deaf to her entreaties. All night long the poor girl trod the floor of her miserable room, bemoaning her lot. On the evening of Sept. 30th she met Hall with another girl, about two blocks from her own house. She implored him not to desert her, and when she saw that words were unavailing, tried to tear him from her rival. He replied to her with curses, and in utter despair she sought the shelter of her apartments. Kirk and his wife were out drinking, and the only other occupant of the room was the hunchback son. She told him her trouble, and, then taking the bottle of arsenic from the closet, said she intended to kill herself. For over a quarter of an hour the crippled boy struggled to wrest the bottle from her grasp, but with the strength of a maniac she flung him from her and took the poison. The hunchback called his father and mother from their drunken revelry. When they reached the house the poor girl was dying. They forced a bottle of lamp oil down her throat. She protested against any effort to save her, saying:—"I only want to die."

AN INCESTUOUS BEAST.—Thomas McQuade, a man of middle age, living in Long Island City, has been arrested, charged with committing incest with his two daughters. It appears that McQuade's wife died about four years ago, and soon after he made the eldest daughter, then thirteen years old, his unnatural paramour. He has kept up his illicit intercourse until about a month since, when, the young woman becoming enciente, he compelled a second daughter, only eleven years of age, to take the place of the older sister. The girls say they concealed their father's crime, as he threatened to kill them if they disclosed the facts. As the time drew near when the eldest daughter expected to be confined, her mind became troubled, and finally, at the instance of her aunt, who noticed her situation, she confessed all to a Catholic priest, who laid the matter before the people and had the man arrested. Much indignation is expressed among the acquaintances of the girls, and threats of lynching are freely made should the brute escape punishment.—Boston Herald, Sept. 30th.

THE CHIEF OF SALT LAKE SAINTS IN PRISON.—Brigham Young was arrested on Oct. 2d, upon an indictment of a grand jury charging him, under the Utah statute, with lewdly and licentiously cohabiting with sixteen different women. The arrest was made by United States Marshal Patrick, at the residence of Young. Owing to the sickness of the prisoner, he was allowed to remain at his house in charge of a deputy marshal. He will be taken before Judge McKean. The penalty imposed by the statute on conviction on this charge is imprisonment of not over ten years nor less than six months, and a fine of not over $1,000 nor less than $100.

A CONCERT HALL GIRL'S GOOD LUCK.

SHE BECOMES HEIRESS TO $100,000.

Two men walked down the flight of stone steps leading into Bismarck Hall, a noted concert saloon at the corner of Pearl and Chatham streets, on Wednesday evening. One of them was evidently a gentleman and an alien. He was a man of portly presence, with light hair, whiskers and moustache, and clear grey eyes. His coat was edged with costly fur, and from the diamond rings which sparkled on his fingers it was to be presumed that he was wealthy. The other was a younger man, an American, with dark, curly hair, and a sharp, hard expression of face. The first was Herr Graf von Reischel, a wealthy resident of the city of Breslau, in the province of Silesia, in Prussia, and the latter was the manager of a down town detective agency. The two men entered the saloon and sat down at a table. The distinguished appearance of Herr Reischel caused three or four of the waiter girls to come forward to wait on the party. One of them was a fine looking brunette, with long, purple black hair, falling down over a scarlet silk dress. She was exceedingly handsome and seemed to attract the attention of the detective particularly, for he eyed her all over, from head to foot, and finally told her to bring him a bottle of wine. When the girl brought the wine and sat down at the table the detective said:—"My young friend, what's your name?" and the girl, in a German accent, replied:—"Minnie White." The detective threw a quick glance at his companion, and both rising from the table, went up to the bar and spoke a few words to Mr. Moller, the proprietor. Moller at once seemed to treat Herr Reischel with the utmost deference, and the party went to a private room off the saloon, where they remained for about five minutes, when Mr. Moller put his head out of the door and said:—"Minnie, come here." The girl went, thinking the party, probably, required another bottle of wine. The door of the room was instantly closed behind her, and Herr Reischel, advancing to her, said:—"Mina Pallersberg, I have come all the way from Breslau to see you." The girl seemed struck with an electric shock. She almost shrieked out:—"Ach, Gott im Himmel," and sank into a chair in a swoon. When she recovered she turned on Herr Reischel and said:—

"Who are you that seem to know so much about me?"

The answer came quickly, "I was never in Eilguth, and so you cannot know me, but my name is Von Reischel, of Breslau, and I am the administrator of your uncle Friedrich's will."

"What will?" the girl asked, in my words.

"Yes," was the reply, "and you are his heiress."

The last answer meant that the poor concert saloon girl is the possessor by the death of her uncle of over $100,000.

Mina Pallersberg, the daughter of Hermann Pallersberg, one of three brothers, Friedrich, Hermann and Christian Pallersberg, who belonged to the town of Eilguth, a few miles from Breslau. The elder brother, Friedrich, never married, but went to Breslau, and there by almost miserly habits amassed the fortune which now falls to his niece. The younger brother Christian, was a farmer, and was what is known in Germany as a good fellow, possessed of all the virtues of a French soldier, and very few of his vices. Friedrich nor Christian married, but lived bachelors' lives, the one hoarding his gold, the other spending his silver freely. Mina's father, Hermann, was a carpenter, and was like his brother Christian, generous and unthinking. His wife died soon after childbirth, and all his life seemed wrapped up in Mina, whom in the tender German way, he used to call his little passion flower. So life in Eilguth went on lowly and lowingly, while in Breslau Friedrich heaped up wealth. Six years ago Mina's father died very poor as could be, and as the younger brother could not afford to keep Mina, the all important question was, what would become of the young girl.

At that time wild stories of American wealth, the El Dorado of the far west, were in every German village, and it was decided that she should seek her fortune here. After days of begging and prayer the younger brother, Christian, prevailed on the miserly Friedrich to give him a few dollars requisite to pay the passage into this country, and she came. She worked in German families as nursery governess, and had saved some money, when she met a man who caused her ruin. Her pride still clung to her, and when she went to work in the concert saloon she changed her name from Mina Pallersberg to Minnie White. There she remained, not writing to her uncle Christian, from day to day thinking of early home, and praying that she might be some time able to return to it, and die there. In German Count Reischel was a frequent visitor, and Friedrich, the miser, found his wealth eloying, and often thought of the little Mina who used to prattle in her childish way to him years and years before. In a moment of human love transitory but yet enough for the purpose, he made a will, naming Herr Reischel administrator of it, in which he left his property to his brother Christian and his niece Mina, somewhere in America. This was three years ago. A year ago he had a quarrel with the brother Christian, owing to the latter having enlisted in a Prussian regiment of the line, and notified Herr Reischel that he would make another will. But before he executed this other will, one morning, in the house of Friedrich Pallersberg, in Unfeld Strasse, Breslau, the occupant was found dead in his arm chair, his night lamp burning on the table beside him and some premissory notes clutched in his hand. Of course the former will was valid, and Herr Graf von Reischel at once sought for Christian Pallersberg. But back from the headquarters of the regiment came the word that on the return of the Adjutant, "Christian Pallersberg, born in Eilguth, 40 years old, color bearer, dead, killed at Woerth, buried on the field, number 9,837." So that Mina, whose whereabouts was unknown, was the sole heiress. How to find her was the question.

Herr von Reischel started for this country and arrived here a month ago. He at once employed the detective mentioned, and set to work to unravel the mystery of the girl's whereabouts. The detective employed, a shrewd man, with a genius for tracing down, and his superior power of analysis soon gave him a clue to the whereabouts of the girl, or, at all events, to her face. He discovered the first place where she had done service under her own name of Mina Pallersberg, and from the lady of the house the subsequent situations she had held, and finally to the house of Mrs. Langfried, in East Twelfth street, where she had been employed as a nursery governess. There he learned about the man who visited her, and he at once thought of the concert saloons. For eight days he searched them, and at length learned that a girl answering the description of the one he sought was in Bismarck Hall. He went there and found her. No longer Minnie White, the concert saloon girl, in the West Hahlia Gyde dress, but in the costume of Mina Pallersberg, to take possession of the house St Unfeld Strasse and the fortune of her uncle Friedrich.—N. Y. Sun, Aug 6th.

WHOSE WIFE IS SHE?

It appears that the captain of a sea going vessel, whose voyages from Switzerland were usually of considerable length, during an interval on shore, determined to take upon himself the responsibilities of matrimony, and, accordingly, led to the altar one of the church in the canton of Soleure a lady of considerable beauty, whom he had met whilst on a visit to a friend in that canton; but happiness is unenduring, and the honeymoon was scarcely over when the sailor received orders to start on a distant voyage. Duty must be performed, and, with a lingering farewell, the newly married couple were parted. After the lapse of a few weeks, news arrived that the ship had been wrecked, and that every soul on board had perished. Six dreary years passed over the widow's head without having brought any contradiction to the sad tale of shipwreck, when the lady, accompanied by her uncle, went on a visit to Paris, and in that capital was wooed and won by a second claimant for her hand. The ceremony was duly performed, and in the pleasures and duties of the honeymoon, some three years of which were the fruit of the second marriage, she forgot her sailor husband. A few days ago, however, a gentleman whose features were bronzed by an African sun, and who bore on his breast the evidence of many a gallant deed of daring, in the shape of several crosses and decorations, entered a cafe on the Boulevarde Montmartre and called for refreshments. Happening to cast his eyes to the further end of the room, he observed a lady seated behind a desk, engaged in writing. Jumping up from his seat in a state of great agitation, he approached her, and, after a short whispered conversation, discovered in the lady his wife, whom he had vainly tried to

TROTTING AND RACING IN CALIFORNIA.

We have heretofore given summaries of the events which took place on the first three days of the Sacramento, Cal., fair, and underneath we present the result of those decided on the two succeeding days—

AGRICULTURAL PARK, SACRAMENTO, CAL.—FOURTH DAY, Friday, Sept. 22; purse $1,000, for horses that had never beaten 3:35; mile heats, 3 in 5.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|

| D. Dennison entered May Howard | 1 | 2 | 1 |
| P. A. Flanagan entered Peanuts | 4 | 5 | 3 |
| J. F. Williams entered Coquette | 2 | 4 | 4 |
| F. Goodhue entered Copperhead | 5 | 3 | 5 |

Time, 2:36½; 2:36½; 2:40; 2:38½; 2:37¼.

SAME DAY.—Purse $1,500; for all horses owned in the State; mile heats, 3 in 5. After trotting three heats, two of which were won by May Fly and one by Jerome, a postponement until the following day was necessitated by darkness.

FIFTH AND LAST DAY.—Saturday, Sept. 23d; Purse $7,500, free for all; mile heats, 3 in 5. Continued from day previous:—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Col. Dickey entered Frank Rhoads | 2 | 5 | 1 |
| A. F. Smith entered May Fly | 1 | 1 | 2 |
| D. Dennison entered Jerome | 4 | 4 | 3 |
| Barney Rice entered Dexter | 3 | 2 | 4 |
| B. E. Harris entered Regulator | 5 | 3 | dis |

Time, 2:33; 2:33¼; 2:33½; 2:33½; 2:33¾; 2:34½.

This result was an astonisher to pool buyers, and the betters fell fearfully, Frank Rhoades scarcely being considered in the race.

Many people went to see what they supposed would be a great treat in the shape of a three mile and repeat running race, but they were doomed to disappointment through a mistake of the starting judge. Out of five entries only two were on the track when the bell had arrived for the start. Oliver Cromwell, by Lodi, dam Annette, and Pillbox, by Norfolk, dam Adda C. After one or two attempts the bell implored, but at that instant the judges noticed that the bit of Pillbox had been drawn out at one side of his mouth. Without thinking anything about the rules, the bell was immediately rung for them to come back. They both wheeled around and were coming back, but when near the stand the trainer of Cromwell ran and told Wilbur Pierce, his rider, to go on and run the heat out, which he did in a jog. Pillbox also started in after Cromwell had run a mile and then held up. On consulting the rules the judges found they had made a mistake, and they had to give the heat, race and money ($1,200) to Oliver Cromwell, and declared Pillbox distanced. This created intense excitement, notwithstanding the explanation made from the judges' stand. An effort was made to have the pools declared off, but the judges' declared that the pools followed the race. As a last resort a protest was entered against the ruling of the judges, and an appeal will be taken from their decision. Thus ended the great race of the week, those that had money bet on Pillbox, with no show to win, feeling particulary sore at the unfortunate result.

SAME DAY.—Purse, $80 and $100 entrance added; for beaten horses.

| | |
|---|---|
| Mr. Tyler entered Alice May | 1 |
| T. Winters entered Bots d'Arc | 4 |
| Mr. Pickett entered Nelly Brown | 3 dr |
| J. A. Merritt entered Phil Sheridan | 2 dr |

Time, 1:47¾; 1:46¾.

THE DEXTER PARK ASSOCIATION AND THE HICKOK ASSAULT CASE.

Our readers will recollect that on the opening day of the late trotting meeting at Dexter Park, Chicago, O. A. Hickok, the jockey, assaulted W. De C. Smith, correspondent of one of our sporting contemporaries, alleging that the latter had made certain undeserved strictures upon his conduct at the track, where he handled the reins over Lucy. The press unanimously demanded that the association expel Hickok from their track under the rules of the National Trotting Association, and after some delay a meeting was held and action taken upon the case. The subjoined letter shows their ruling and gives reasons therefor, which are satisfactory:—

CHICAGO, ILL., Sept. 21, 1871.

GEO. H. SMITH, ESQ., SECRETARY NATIONAL TROTTING ASSOCIATION, LOCK BOX 168, PROVIDENCE, R. I.—DEAR SIR.—At a meeting of the trustees of the Dexter Park Driving Association, held September 20, 1871, the following resolution was passed:—

"Resolved, That Orrin A. Hickok be fined $100 for unbecoming deportment on the grounds of this association."

A word of explanation in regard to the severe means due to the National Association, and the comments already made by the trustees, to be quite proper in justification of the delay occasioned in granting judgment. The affair happening, as it did, on the first day of our meeting, before the judges were in the stand, and on a day when Mr. Hickok's character not prominent in the capacity of a driver, there were some doubts in the minds of some of the trustees how far their powers extended, and desiring to act with judgment when the matter should come up, it was but plain until after the last meeting.

Yesterday was the first day a quorum could be got together, owing to the absence until now of several members of the board. In long to the absence until now of several members of the board. In view of the fact that Mr. Hickok made Mr. Smith an apology, and that Mr. Smith accepted it, and in view of Mr. Hickok's subsequent expulsion, under all the circumstances, he cannot be considered the aggressor, and in consideration of the gentlemanly conduct of Mr. Smith in the matter, I feel assured that the National Association will deem their judgment correct.

Very respectfully, yours,
O. E. CROSMAN,
Secretary Dexter Park Driving Association.

TROTTING AT FLEETWOOD.

Four trots were announced to come off on this Morrisania, N. Y., track on Wednesday, the 4th inst., but one of them resulted in a forfeit, another was postponed by mutual consent, and the other two were brought to a decision, although ten heats were required to show which were the respective winners. The first race was a match for $500, mile heats, best three in five, in harness, between D. R. Goff's black gelding Detective, and W. E. Weeks' chestnut gelding Star Henry. The latter was the favorite among the betting men previous to the start, owing to his having been recently successful in a race over this track. In the first heat an even start was made, the Detective quickly showing in front, and leading to the half mile pole, where he made so bad a break that his driver had to pull him to a stand-still to settle him. This allowed Star Henry to obtain the lead, which he retained to the score, winning the heat in 2:36. In the second heat, Star Henry took the lead, owing to Detective breaking just after the word was given, but at the half mile the latter had closed and obtained the front position, fairly out-trotting his rival, and winning the heat in 2:32¼. In the third heat Star Henry again took and kept the lead until after passing the quarter pole, when Detective put on the steam, out-trotted him on the low side and was winning the heat apparently with ease, when he left his feet, and Star Henry shot past him, and leaving him at every stride, beat him home by fifteen lengths in 2:47¼. John Murphy was now put up behind Detective, and he won the fourth heat, after a splendid race, by half a length in 2:47¼. In the fifth heat Star Henry led a full length to the quarter, but Detective trotting finely on the back-stretch, was at his wheel at the half mile pole. Breasting the hill, Murphy sent Detective along, and collaring Henry, a magnificent neck and neck struggle ensued up the home-stretch, Detective eventually winning by a neck in 2:43¾. Summary:—

The second race was a match for $500, between G. Mulligan's b g Rock of Ages, and G. Smith's b g William, mile heats, best three in five, in harness. Rock of Ages was the favorite at $100 to $40. He won the first heat in 3:12¼, and the second in 3:06, and the betting became $100 to $10 on his winning the race. William won the third heat in 3:12; but the driving of Rock of Ages showed there was a screw loose, and that he was not intended to win. Mr. Tallman, the superintendent of the track, promptly, and with a commendable exhibition of honesty, removed the driver of Rock of Ages and put John Murphy in his place. William won the fourth heat by a dozen lengths in 2:37, owing to Murphy's horse breaking badly, but the fifth heat and race, thanks to Murphy's fine driving, was won by Rock of Ages in 3:12 by nearly a distance. Summary:—

GOLDSMITH MAID AND LUCY AT ST. JOSEPH.

Our correspondent at St. Joseph, Mo., sends us the following concerning the contest between the above mentioned highflyers there on the 30th ult.:—

For the past fortnight St. Joseph has been not a little excited over the expected advent of Goldsmith Maid, Lucy, and lesser lights of the turf, who were known to be en route for the Great Western Race Course at this city on the 26th, 29th and 30th of September. Huge posters were billed in the city and distributed over the country, setting forth this fact, and the Lilly press have kept it constantly before the people" that the Maid had beaten Dexter's time at Milwaukee, and she intended to make her mile here in 2:15. Of course this was gammon, but it took immensely. Everybody and his wife, who could raise the "stamps," was bound to see the prodigy of speed, who knocked the "King of the Turf" out of time. To hear some people talk, Dexter was nothing but a second rate horse now, whom Bonner would dispose of at less than first cost, and come down with a cool $100,000 for what Goldsmith, who had beaten his cherished pet. Everybody talked horse, eat horse, drank horse, slept horse, dreamed horse. Wherever you went, in private house, hotel, saloon or workshop, horse racing was the chief topic of discussion. "Horse on the brain" swept over our city like a pestilence. Even staid, sober clergymen condescended to talk horse, and a prominent grocerymen so far forgot himself as to answer "2:17, ma'am," in reply to a lady, who asked the price of eggs. Tickets to the races were sent to editors of papers in adjoining states, and they, as a matter of course, "puffed" considerably, not forgetting always to recount the fact that Goldsmith was the Maid who beat Dexter's time, and would, probably, see how he could be smugly ensconced in the palatial stables owned by Robert Bonner. This was the big blister which drew the crowd. Such a sight, to western people, occurs not often in a lifetime. What was a dollar admission to see such a rarity? In after years, when the Maid had passed on to be an angel, those who paid their dollar to see her here could say with pride, when her memory came up fresh and green:—"Ah, yes, I knew her; I saw her; she was dreadful fast; beat Dexter; time, 2:15, over the Great Western Course at St. Joe." Such was the feeling, generally. Sporting men knew better, and some outside of the "ring" offered great odds in favor of Dexter, with no takers. This looked a little suspicious, and it was privately hinted that the Milwaukee affair was a "put up" job in order to make money in the western tour the Maid was about to take.

Well, Saturday, the 30th, dawned clear, cool and bright, and people came flocking into the city by hundreds. Every carriage, buggy, omnibus, hack, express wagon, dray, hand cart and wheelbarrow were put into requisition in the city to carry to the race course the mighty mass of humanity who had come, many of them long, weary miles, to see the little Maid who beat Dexter's time at Milwaukee, and who was going to "do it" here in 2:15! The book was well balled, and the ball relished. Many persons seemed to like the idea that Dexter's record was about to be wiped out, and they were going to be "in at the death." But alas, for brilliant fancies and early bright dreams! Like beautiful wreaths of smoke flitting upward in the crisp morning air, to be dispelled and vanish into nothingness by a breath, so passed away all the gaudy air castles built upon hope, but broken to the sight. By two o'clock, the time set for the trial of speed to commence, a very large crowd had gathered at the course, variously estimated at from five to ten thousand. At all events, more people were assembled than I ever saw in one company in this city before. The track was in good order, and the horses in splendid condition. Time was called and Lucy had the pole to start, with an even score, but the Maid came along, and soon led Lucy by several lengths, which she widened out coming in on the second heat in 2:18¾. In the third heat the Maid's time was 2:23, leaving Lucy further behind than ever. And so ended the race. The Maid is a fair, square trotter, and Lucy is no "slouch," but people who went there to see Dexter's time beaten were sadly disappointed.

DOUBLE TEAM TROT.

That favorite resort of turf loving Bostonians, Mystic Park, was the scene of a trot for $1,500, between the celebrated New York team, Geo. Wilkes and Honest Allen, and the Boston pair, Jessie Wales and India Rubber Ben, on Monday 2d inst. Considerable interest was taken in the result, and speculation was rife at odds on the New Yorkers. A summary is appended:—

MR. T. H. PEDLEY, a well known turfite, and at one time a large and much respected book-maker, died at Eastbourne, Eng., on Sept. 16th. He was attacked with illness at the York races and died of congestion of the lungs. He was the owner of many race horses, his principal confederate being his father-in-law, Mr. Gully.

J. F. MORROW, of Boston, has, we learn, purchased the black gelding Comoro for $15,000.

MAURICE DALEY vs. ALBERT GARNIER.

A DEFAT FOR NEW YORK.—GARNIER WINNER BY 135.—AN AVERAGE OF TWENTY-SEVEN.

The first game of the home-and-home series between Maurice Daley and Albert Garnier, was played at Metropolitan Hall, Chicago, in the presence of a numerous assembly. All the "talent" was in attendance, and from afar there were Michael Foley and George Slosson, respectively, of Grand Rapids and Flint, Mich. The great city of Gotham was represented by but two gentlemen, both being amateurs, Daley having gone on to Chicago unattended. Still he had friends in abundance there, and among the experts he was the favorite for choice; but there was but little betting. There has never been a match to equal this. The apathy with which it was regarded by all save the backers of the men was something marvellous. It is to be accounted for by the fact that it was a Young Unknown vs. Young Failure. One had never played a respectable match in public, and the other had been beaten whenever confronted by a player anywhere near his equal in speed. The game in Chicago was therfore commonly regarded as likely to be a mere scramble for the stake-money, devoid of headwork, and depending upon luck to win; and it was also conceded that the man who should be first to get a good lead would assuredly be the first to score 1,500.

The players were introduced by Thomas Foley, Esq., of Chicago, and were rapturously received. It having been announced that Peter Snyder would officiate as referee, and that Frank Parker and James Onsick would act as umpires, respectively, for Garnier and Daley, at 8.15, the players approached the table and opened

THE GAME.

The lead was won by "the nephew of his uncle," as he is called, undoubtedly, because there is no more than about a seventy-fifth cousin relationship between him and his reputed "uncle in the newspapers." Selecting the spot ball, he rolled down a "lay out," off which Garnier counted, but went to pocket on the succeeding shot. Slow work on both sides, Daley missing easy ones. At the end of the 11th innings Mel. Fowler, one of the amateurs who had gone on to Chicago, telegraphed Clar. Conover—"Garnier, 108; Daley, 76." The Frenchman thus won the "first turn," and in consequence of two failures on draw shots by Daley, Garnier also won the second and third turns, through the medium of a superb run of 189. The balls were left in good position for Daley, who, after caroming once, missed also his easy shot, the fourth inside of fifteen innings. At the close of the 18th innings Garnier slipped up in "facing" for the stick. Daley now made the finest run of the game, 143. The first half was scored under difficulties, but at 61 he got the balls in good position, and was fast overhauling Garnier, when he missed an easy carom, as usual, and left the balls in a heap for Garnier, who benefitted thereby to the extent of 120, the run being an extremely lucky one. In the 29th innings this bit of good fortune was repeated, Garnier rolling up 301 by fine play, the opportunities for which were wholly due to lucky "kisses." The game was now 901 to 577 in favor of the Chicagoan.

Daley here put in a run of 193, following it up with 54, making the game—Garnier, 1,005; Daley, 760. The latter gradually closed up, and, at the 49th innings, he was but 80 points behind. But Garnier's success all right had reduced a feeling of confidence, and he easily shook off Daley again, making runs of 54, 75, 31 and 96, the latter terminating the contest, and giving its maker a majority of 135 points. The game was especially notable for the absence of long runs on either side, Garnier surprisingly successful. In shoot, Daley as well as Garnier was rapidly improving at once respect, and in one only, Garnier exhibited improvement since he was in this city. That was in cushion caroms. Daley played better around the table than had been looked for at his hands, but was surprisingly weak in "nursing," a run of 139 in a long game of 1,500 being no billiards for a nurser of his speed. His great strength as a nurser is at the same time a weakness, however. He takes too many chances, and when he slips up, as slip up he must, it is ruinous, as he leaves the balls well for his antagonist.

The game was a sprightly, though a lop-hazard one, from first to last, and the winner's average has been surpassed but four times by winners, those winners being Cyrille Dion and Rudolphe. The only loser who has surpassed Daley's average is Cyrille Dion. Daley, has therefore, to cause to be ashamed of his defeat. Let him endeavor, in the return game, to reach the average he made in this, putting his run at 27, and Garnier at 28. We append the score and summary:—

SUMMARY.—Match between Maurice Daley and Albert Garnier, at Metropolitan Hall, for $600 a side. 1,500 points, four ball carome, one and push barred, on a second sized four pocket table; played at Chicago, on Monday, Oct. 2d. Game commenced at 8.15 and ended at 12 o'clock. Umpire for Daley, James Onsick; umpire for Garnier, Frank Parker. Referee, Peter Snyder. Scorer, Michael Honohan. Total number of Garnier, 1,505; Daley, 1,305. Average—Garnier, 28, 44-46; Daley, 27, 45-46. Highest runs—Garnier, 120, 189, 201; Daley, 153, 126, 189. Time of game—Three hours and forty-five minutes.

BILLIARDS BY TELEGRAPH.—The feasibility of telegraphically playing a match between New York and Philadelphia, or New York and Boston, is now being discussed. It would be easier to play it between New York and Philadelphia. There are several private lines running between these cities, one of which might possibly be borrowed for the occasion, while we believe there are no private lines between New York and Boston. Such a game, with the positions of the balls mapped out at each innings, would form a good exercise for analysis, and develope the weak points of the players to a nicety.

A CLAIMANT FOR THE CHAMPIONSHIP OF THE WORLD.

—Joseph Dion, who ever since 1866 has stood ready to play any one in the world at the English, the French and the American games, and who has already won such a match against a foreign player, now formally claims the title of champion of the world:—

NEW YORK, Oct. 6th, 1871.

FRANK QUEEN, ESQ., EDITOR N. Y. CLIPPER.—DEAR SIR.—Permit me to announce, through your columns, that I claim the championship of the world at the French, English and American games, and, in support of this claim, I am prepared to play said games (French, 5-5 points; English, 1,000, and American, 1,000) with any expert in the world. The amount of stakes I leave to the discretion of whoever may come forward as my opponent, merely stipulating that it shall not be for less than $250 a side each game, other terms to be mutually agreed upon. Winner of two games to be regarded as winner of the match. Respectfully, JOSEPH DION.

PLAYING AT PATERSON, N. J.—At the room of Frink and Alyea, on the 3d inst., Joseph Dion gave an exhibition before about three hundred persons, fifty of whom were ladies. In a three ball game of 100 points, played with an amateur, Dion averaged 3⅓, ran 15 twice and won by 50. A four ball game of 1,000 points, played with Charles A. Frink, resulted in a score of 1,000 to 903. The best runs made by Dion, whose average was 40, were 90, 117, 139 and 235. Frink, who lost, played very steadily, making runs of 99 and 111.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP.—The defeat of Daley in Chicago is to be regretted, in one respect. Had he won, the city would have put him forward as a candidate against Cyrille Dion for the honors of the championship. There is now no prospect of a match, as it is doubtful if Chicago has faith enough in Garnier to put him in competition with so doughty a champion as Cyrille.

ANOTHER TOURNAMENT AT THE FOUR BALL GAME.—There is a proposition afoot for a tournament at the four ball game, to be held in this city. This is not designed to interfere in any way with the championship, and competition will be for money prizes alone.

SLOSSON VS. FOLEY.—At Chicago, on the 19th inst., George F. Slosson and Michael Foley are to play the four ball game on a four pocket table, for $250 a side. Game to be 1,500 points.

A LARGE RUN AT THE THREE BALL GAME.—Henry Rhines, the other day, made a run of 91 at the three ball game.

BASE BALL.

ATHLETIC vs. PASTIME.

The re-organized professional nine of the Pastimes, of Baltimore, visited Philadelphia on the 3d inst., for the purpose of playing a match with the Athletics, of that city. The weather was bright, warm and enjoyable, and the attendance consequently large. The Athletics were short of the valuable services of Sensenderfer and of Reach, while the Pastimes presented their strongest nine. The Athletics, who went first to the bat, were disposed of in the three first innings without scoring, and in the fourth innings scored their first run, and that being given them by Hall's wild throwing. The Pastimes started off with the lead, scoring four runs in the first and two runs in the fourth innings, none of which, however, were earned, owing to the poor play of Pratt at second. The Athletics now made a change in the positions of their nine, Cuthbert, who had a sprained ankle, going to first base, while Fisler strengthened the weak spot at second, and Pratt played in the out field. The advance at the end of the fourth innings made it 6 to 1 in favor of the Pastimes, but so admirably did the change work that the Pastimes were unable to add an additional run to their score in the last five innings, while the Athletics, by good batting, and materially aided by fielding errors of Hall, Barrett and Buck, added fifteen runs in these five innings, and thus won a decisive victory. The chief features of the game were the excellent pitching of McBride and Matthews, and the fine catching of Malone and Lennon, the short stopping of Radcliff, of the Athletics, and the out fielding of Mincher, of the Pastimes. The game was rather below the average, neither club fielding up to their mark, while the batting of the Pastimes was very weak. The score:—

ÆTNA vs. EXPERT.

The Ætnas, of Chicago, one of the best amateur clubs of the west, played the first game of their eastern tour on Wednesday, the 4th inst., at Philadelphia, their opponents being the Experts, of that city. Very little publicity had been given to the game, and but few spectators were present. The experts have not the nine they had in the early part of the season, Lovett, Miller, Rolli, Luff and other excellent players having joined other organizations or given up play. Under these circumstances the Experts, who were short-handed, made a more creditable stand against their well disciplined opponents than was expected. The Ætnas batted well and fielded finely in a majority of innings, Ward's out-fielding being the most noticeable feature. On the part of the Experts, McKenna filled his position at first base in a faultless manner, and Halbach and Ward vied with each other in neatness of ball throwing. The score:—

ÆTNA vs. OLYMPIC.

The Ætnas played their second and last game in Philadelphia on the afternoon of the 5th inst., with the noted amateur nine of the Olympics, of that city, and they again succeeded in winning a creditable victory, mainly owing to their superior discipline, as their batting was not any better than that of their opponents. The Ætnas made all their runs in four innings, earning three, however, in the eighth innings; although they made eleven in that innings after chances had been given. The Olympics' fielding could have been improved upon, third base and short stop being the weak spots in this nine. The fielding of Ward Reynolds and Quinn of the Ætnas was excellent. Warbrick's splendid catching was the main feature of the Olympics' play. The score:—

KEYSTONE vs. AMICABLE.

The Keystone Club, of Jersey City, and the Amicables, of New York, played a game together on the Union grounds, Sept. 29th, and as the two clubs are composed of colored men, a large was quite a number in attendance to see some anticipated sport. The weather, however, was cold and blustering and neither club, therefore, played up to their usual mark. The grounds were neatly stirred in blue cage, white pants and blue checked stockings, and some of them were quite good-looking young fellows. The Jersey players had on the old style suit of mixed color, some of them playing in ordinary dress. On they came in neatness of uniform they made up in skilful play. The score:—

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, Oct. 9th, '71.

No doubt you are all aware, dear friends, that "the melancholy days have come, the saddest of the year," and everybody seems to be enjoying them with great gusto. In fact, the more melancholy the days the more jolly and comical the dear people become. The theatres are all open, vieing with each other in the attractions presented for the entertainment of their friends and patrons, and putting their shoulders to the wheel in downright earnest. Then we have opera, single and double breasted, each prima donna and primo tenore doing their prettiest, and opening their mouths to their full extent, just the same as when they are about to take in a codfish ball or put out of sight a savory dish of pork and beans; and some of these opera people have awful chasms, frightful to look upon, yet the sounds that issue thereout are as soft and tender as a chicken's liver, and as sweet and melodious as the innocent prattle of a little girl. Then we are threatened with a deluge of concerts, some "on the European plan," some on the Canal street; but we must make up our minds to bear with them all to the best of our ability; we must swallow them just as we swallow our matutinal plate of hash, shutting our eyes to the suspicious mixture, and topping off with a bite of lemon to take the bad taste away. Then we have our variety halls, and our minstrel halls, and our Oakey Halls, who divide public attention, and help to make the metropolis the great city it is. Oakey Hall, the dram..tist, the feuilletonist, the wit and the contributor to the press of New York, is under a cloud just now, but he will doubtless emerge there'from ere long, when the political hue and cry is over, showing the brighter in contrast with the dark clouds which his detractors have sought to envelope him in forever. Ever the gentleman, ever courteous to the poor and lowly as well as to the affluent, with a good word for all, our mayor will survive the crusade now going on, and live down the malice of his opponents.....And speaking of crusades and the talk against the Tammany Indians and other curiosities of the nineteenth century, we saw in a western paper a few days ago a statement that a Mrs. Parrott is in the field with a new baby, weighing almost seventeen pounds. That may be peace, the Indians, or Mr. Parrott during our late war we remember that there were a great number of twenty pound Parrotts in the field.....And talking of Parrott's talk, the welkin already rings with the shouts of our free and independent citizens as they come forth from their retirement to do battle in freedom's cause. Yes, indeed, the day of battle is at hand, fellow-citizens, and in the enlightened language of a diseased poet,

> The contest grows exciting: here's a pother
> More noisy and disturbing than the other.

But, fellow sovereigns and fellow citizens, the welfare of our race is now in danger! An insidious foe, insensible to the promptings of decency and honor, has surprised our outposts and attacked our citadel. Treachery from an independent constituency! Are we men? Are we a—a—. But a day of retribution is coming, when the Phœnix of liberty shall arise from her ashes, and the proud bird of freedom—of freedom—the proud bird—a—a— the proud bird of freedom, wrapping himself in the star spangled banner, shall rend from our wrists the gyves which fetter and the chains which gall. Then only —Tremendous applause—shall the laden fellow sufferers, when the day star of gladness shall float o'er the bright plane; when the ransomed sinner shall —sinner shall, shall—bright plane; when the ransomed sinner ("Hooray—three cheers for the NEW YORK CLIPPER!" "Hooray, hooray, hooray! Tigar, an! ah!") shall we breathe the breath of safety; then will e-pluribus-unum—the-pandemonium-pandemonium-Erin-go-bragh be enthroned on our—on our—be embiazoned on our— (Great enthusiasm and deafening cheers). Again—we have been told that republics are ungrateful! Lay not that flattering unction to your soul, fellow countrymen! Oh, no; oh, no. We have sought round this verdant earth for unfading joys. We have seen the gaiied jade to wince, the stricken deer to weep, but never have we heard such perfidy; never have we seen such, never have we seen ("Hooray!"). And yet we are told that the great and glorious city of New York is a cesspool of iniquity, a whirlpool of corruption. ("How about old Kidleybenders?") "Take him for all in all, we ne'er shall look upon his like again." ("Yes, but, what about the Lime Kiln Man?") "He was a man for a' that, and a' that." Ah, friends and fellow sufferers, the day is but begun. Wake from your lethargy; wake for your altars and your fires, wake till the last armed foe expires—my mother, oh, my mother. We have been told that, that—— But we have said sufficient to convince you that the charge is baseless, the envenomed shaft a fickle lie! ("Three cheers for the great theatrical, political and sportical paper, the NEW YORK CLIPPER.") And when, at last, the great firmament on high and all the etherial blue therein shall pass away; when the Jews shall be gathered together, and the fundamental principles of our republic explained to them; when the lion, and the lamb, and the tiger, and the performing elephant and the educated mules shall lie down together in pleasant places with no man to make them afraid; when the infant, mewling and puking in its disconsolate mother's arms, shall play, and the cockatrice and the sound of the timbrel be heard o'er Egypt's dark sea; when the plaintive moan of the dying day shall merge into one extatic thrill of delight; when chaos shall come again in all her pristine loveliness and emblematic fires; then oh, thou suffering people, shall the hop frog enjoy his jump, the porcupine his fretful quills, and all humanity shall rise in the splendor of their regenerated natures, and—generated natures, and—shall rise—natures—("Hooray," and deafening applause.) Fellow citizens, we have done; if our remarks shall influence you for good or evil, our end is attained, and we shall have the sweet consolation of knowing that we have not addressed you in vain.....Friends, are you well this morning? Are you able to stand a heavy dose of machine poetry? All right then, you shall have it, and our story shall be ground out by "Our Jim," who has just returned from the Rochester convention, rather mellow for his trip, with ideas all confused, and tongue on pivot hung. Our poetic history shall be in verse, long metre, and shall tell of the

CRUEL FATE OF OTHELLO AND HIS WIFE.
GROUND OUT BY "OUR JIM" WITH ONE HAND HID BEHIND HIM.
A Tragedy Repast.

White folks, lend us your ears while we tell a little story,
The story of Othello, p'raps you may have heard the name;
He was born of colored parents 'way down in Alabama,
Where they bake the spicy hoe cake and the possum serves for game.

Way up among the sea, where they eat off gold and silver,
And go to bed with a kid glove on, so 'tis said by them as tell,
Lived an old chap named Brabantio, that had made his pile in Wall street,
And retired on the interest of his stocks, to eat a swell;

Now this old cuss had a daughter, oh, her cheeks were like
Desdemona
Floating in a china saucer chuck full of snow white cream,
And her hair fell o'er her shoulders like a bucket full o' water
Poured my widow mother echo thinks down a mountain stream.

As this girl sat at a window on a balmy day in summer,
A-wishin' at the ships as they loaf along the street,
The devil we would have't that Othello must cause throttle'
To be cut for another's benefit, as all along upon a seat,

From a sort o' kind o' faintness kind o' sort o' came upon him,
As she took a look in him with those eyes like two hoe cake,
And as her fair complexion darker fell at his feet a floatin',
Again she looked, and made love to him, and took one look to take;

So he crept to the Hart'in' emblem and into his bosom stuck it,
And he cut for the marble steps he gave the bell a tweeze,
And when the girl his own true love let open the trifle to her,
And blushed to find it came to fall upon his knees;

Well, just as the old man entered old Brabantio came flyin'
Up the steps as he entered the room and he cried, quick as wink,
"Now, you've gone and married my daughter, you cannot have my daughter,
And you've got to go to prison—so get up and choose it, quick."

So he locked her in her room and upon her turned the clincher,
But they soy love is blind as well as deaf, with the proverb we agree;
And as night threw each star from her balcony reclining,
And the dogs did bark to hear him like a ripe peach from a tree.

Gentle reader, disaster has overtaken us; the machine has been taken ill, leaving the efforts of the Rochester convention have begun to manifest themselves on James, and he is totally unfit to finish this soul stirring and exciting story; suffice it to say that another mischief making fool called Iago got possession of the handkerchief and accused her of having pawned it to get some old Jamaica with; then there was a row, and Judge Dowling gave the whole party six months apiece on the island. History tells us, further, that they made considerable trouble up there, and complained of the grub, which is not what Desdemona had been accustomed to; so they created a revolution, and, to preserve the peace, a Brooklyn judge granted a stay of proceedings, and the crowd got out; but evil associations corrupt good morals, they say, and Desdy got thick with a tow headed chap called Mike Cassio, an illicit whiskey distiller, with whom Iago was at loggerheads, you will understand; so what should he do, bless your heart, when Mike and Desdy were lallygagging together, and being spoony on each other, but bring forward the nigger, Othello, who, being a jealous old fool, made a good deal of fuss about the affair, and actually sent her home, and gave Mike a backhander over the mouth, which settled his hash for him. The miserable Iago, not being satisfied with the mischief he had already made, managed to work on the nigger's feelings to an alarming extent, accusing Mrs. Otheller of going to a Mercer street house of assignation with the jaw-broken Cassio—which was all a lie, as you have, no doubt, already seen. The nigger, with a volcano raging in his breast, went for the gentle Desdy and caught her at her evening devotions, for she was a pious child, as you will understand, having been brought to see the error of her ways at a very early age at a revival then going on at brother Allen's chapel, which will account for her strong partiality for niggers in general and Mister Otheller in particular. As we said, he approached the innocent young wife, who was in her night gown and cap, just preparing to lie down upon her virtuous couch, and hereupon ensued the following dialogue:—

Otheller.—Mrs. Otheller, who gave you that ring upon your finger?
Desdy.—I bought it at the dollar store on Broadway.
Otheller.—It's a lie.
Desdy.—I can prove it by Mike Cassio, who was present when it I bought.
Otheller.—Ah, ha! Mike Cassio! 'Tis true, then, the story I have heard. Oh, Desdy, oh, Desdy oh, Dreadful.
Desdy.—Me to'd! what alls thee? I have done naught.
Otheller.—Oh, Desdy; oh, Desdy; oh, Desdy; cussed spite, that ever I was born to set it right.
Desdy.—Then a rongest me, noble Mower; I am true to thee.
Otheller.—Liar! Get thee to bed, to bed, to bed.

The upshot of the whole affair was, that Mister Otheller choked his wife to death with the bolster, and then, finding that she was in nocent, and that Iago was the cause of all the trouble, he got out a warrant from Judge Bixby for the arrest of the latter, and then killed himself to death with le sabre de mon pere!

Thus ends this strange, eventful history, which killed several human beings, and brought even James to his earthly beer.

City Summary.

MISS CHARLOTTE CUSHMAN, the eminent native tragedienne, who in years gone by was wont to thrill large audiences by the efforts of her great dramatic genius, returned to the stage, for a brief period, on Monday evening, Sept. 25th, making her rentree upon the boards of Booth's Theatre, in the character of Queen Katherine in Shakespeare's tragedy entitled "Henry VIII," which was acted with the following cast:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Katherine | Miss Charlotte Cushman |
| Cardinal Wolsey | Wm. Creswick |
| King Henry | D. W. Waller |
| Cardinal Campeius | D. C. Anderson |
| Capucius | Rosene |
| Duke of Buckingham | J. Wilson |
| Duke of Norfolk | Fred Monroe |
| Duke of Suffolk | N. W. Decker |
| Lord High Chamberlain | A. W. Fenno |
| Lord Sands | Robt Pateman |
| Earl of Surrey | Marius Tardi |
| Gardiner | J. Rooney |
| Bishop of Lincoln | Henry Hogan |
| Cromwell | John W. Norton |
| Brandon | E. F. Johnson |
| Sergeant-at-arms | G. H. Harris |
| Clerk of Court | J. R. Randall |
| Archbishop of Canterbury | John Taylor |
| Lady Denny | Marian Andrews |
| Anne Boleyn | Teresa Seiden |
| Patience | Ellen Livingstone |
| Agatha | Charlotte Cave |
| Cicely | Clara Whitlock |

The mounting of the tragedy was excellent, pains having evidently been taken in the preparation of the sceneries and costumes to make them as near historically correct as possible. Miss Cushman's name has long been associated with the character of Katherine, and she is, if not the best representative thereof that has ever been witnessed on the American stage, and when she stepped upon the mimic scene, there went forth from the vast audience assembled such an exuberant demonstration of welcome as must have cheered her heart and convinced her that, although she had been absent from the stage nearly ten years, she had been by no means forgotten. Her re-appearance upon the stage took the public quite by surprise, as they had been informed, only a few months since, by rumors from Scotland, where she was then residing for medical treatment, that her life was despaired of, and that in any event her malady was considered incurable. Returning to her native land she rapidly convalesced; still it was thought that though no formal farewell of the stage had been taken, she had retired forever from public life. Her return was hailed with pleasure, as it not only afforded an opportunity to her old admirers to again witness her performances, but permits the rising generation to judge for themselves of an artist whom they have heard their parents so highly laud. Cardinal Woolsey was well acted by Mr. Creswick, although the impersonation was by no means great. His make-up was good, his enunciation clear and distinct, and the soliloquies were well delivered, yet, as a whole, the impersonation lacked grandeur, as well as light and shade. D. W. Waller has long been commended for his acting of "bluff King Hal," which evinced much study and research. In action and make-up he was all that could be desired. D. C. Anderson presented a dignified and stately picture of Cardinal Campeius. John Wilson acted the Duke of Buckingham creditably. Robert Pateman created no little merriment as Lord Sands. J. W. Norton deserves commendation for his performance of Cromwell. A. W. Fenno was quiet and correct as the Lord High Chamberlain, and the remaining gentlemen of the cast endeavored to conscientiously discharge their duties. Miss Teresa Seiden looked charmingly as Anne Boleyn, and read the few lines assigned her correctly. Miss Marian Andrews as Lady Denny is to be commended, and the other small parts received due attention. The vocalist who sang "Angels Ever Bright and Fair," was not heard to excellent advantage, and we were somewhat surprised to learn that a vocalist of this kind has been secured therefor, as was hitherto the usual custom. "Henry VIII" has been acted during the past two weeks to large audiences, the lower floor being crowded, and the first tier well filled.

MR. AND MRS. W. J. FLORENCE commenced an engagement at the Grand Opera House, Monday evening, Oct. 2d, and on that evening Edmund Falconer's last Irish drama, which is now being acted at the Princess' Theatre, London, Eng., entitled "Eileen Oge; or, Dark's the Hour Before the Dawn," was produced for the first time in America, it being acted with the following cast:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Bryan O'Farrell | W. J. Florence |
| Bridget Maguire | Mrs. Florence |
| Patrick O'Donnell | Geo Clarke |
| John Thomas | M. W. Fiske |
| Rev. Mr. Mahoney | J. F. Hagan |
| Mr. Madison | Mr. Morton |
| Henry Loftus, Esq | E. Thorne |
| Mr. Moriarty | T. J. Hind |
| Andy McCann | Geo. Johnson |
| Tim, the Penman | M. Wallace |
| McShane | J. B. Brutone |
| Mr. Creagh | C. Burke |
| Mr. Talbot | Mr. Enos |
| Miss Rose Evans | Georgie Clarke |

and J. F. Hagan were especially engaged to strengthen the cast. The sceneries used were freshly painted by J. S. Schell and G. W. Dayton. The Hawthorns, which is used on more than one occasion during the performance, and the Hayfield, from the pencil of Mr. Schell, are deserving of the highest praise, and we must accord to him a high rank among distemper painters. Mr. Florence published the play from, shortly after the production of the drama in London, Eng., we have no need to repeat it now, but we will say that it was a happy conceit of the author to reproduce in the closing scene of the play the situations, action and almost entirely the dialogue of the opening scene, simply reversing the positions of Patrick O'Donnell and Henry Loftus. We consider it one of the best Irish dramas that has been written, and the character of "Peggy Day," by the same author. Its dialogue is good, the action being sprightly and the story well told. There is not a stuffed stick used in the piece, and barring a single skirmish between the peasantry and the military, which is exceedingly well handled, the drama bears not the slightest resemblance to the old time Irish dramas. Mr. Florence, though the rose from a sick bed to keep faith with the public, acted Bryan O'Farrell with much humor and naturalness. The idiosyncrasies of the honest, warm hearted Irish peasant, ever ready to serve a friend or fight a foe, were faithfully pictured. George Clarke, who was warmly welcomed on his re-appearance, acted Patrick O'Donnell in a frank, manly manner. M. W. Fiske created no little merriment by his impersonation of the English servant, John Thomas, who was unacceptably cast for the hand of Bridget Maguire. J. F. Hagan gave one of the most natural pieces of acting that we have witnessed for a long time, as the Rev. Mr. Mahoney, the Catholic priest. C. W. Barry acted the middleman Madison, effectively bringing out in a strong light the villainous part of his character. Henry Loftus, the landed proprietor, an apparent gentleman, yet a thorough scoundrel at heart, was played by E. F. Thorne excellently well; we can say more concisely no ability. T. J. Hind during his New York career. His powers of dissimulation, although heavily taxed, responded to the call. Mr. Moriarty, the conventional farmer tenant, received full justice at the hands of T. J. Hind. Tim, the penman, a villainous ruffian, who is a slave to drink, was admirably made up and well acted by Mr. Waddleton, who thoroughly individualized the character. The other male parts were fairly rendered. Mrs. W. J. Florence acted Bridget Maguire with much vivacity, and enlivened the performance by the singing of some character Irish ballads, which were much applauded. Miss Rose Evans' impersonation of Eileen Oge was very uneven, some portions of it being excellent, while others were quite the reverse. This lady possesses much innate dramatic ability, and if she would but pay some attention to light and shade, and subdue her tendency to act everything after the manner of high tragedy, her performances would become much improved. Miss Ione Burke played Norah O'Donnel satisfactorily, and in an effective situation in the old mill scene actually startled the audience by a burst of power which none hitherto supposed she possessed. The other characters require no comment. The third scene of the second act, the Hayfield, is one of the most pleasing in the drama. The stage is covered with hay, and numbers of male and female peasants are seen turning it with rakes and forks and stacking it. After their labors are finished they indulge in a merry-making, singing a chorus, which was encored, and indulging in a dance, which has a picturesque effect. While the sports are going on a bailiff, accompanied by a military force, enter to make a seizure, and are resisted by the peasants, who use their forks to ward off the bayonet thrusts of the soldiers; while the females, who have retired to the rear, pour a volley of good sized stones upon the soldiers, completely vanquishing them. At the close of the last act, after the story has been told and the lovers re-united, the dialogue is prolonged for the purpose of uniting Bryan and Bridget in marriage and for speaking a tag to the piece, which we think is a mistake, as the moment the hero and heroine are re-united the audience commence leaving and not one word of what is subsequently spoken is heard. One reason of the success of this drama is that the Irish comedian and soubrette do not monopolize the entire attention of the audience and render every other character subservient to them. There is a legitimate drama, and they hold no better positions in it than do the low comedian and soubrette in any standard play, who only serve to lighten the piece. The attendance has been liberal, and we think the drama bids fair to enjoy a run, being announced for continued repetition.

THE SUCCESS ACHIEVED BY "DIVORCE" at the Fifth Avenue Theatre precludes the possibility of any change being immediately made in the programme there. The attendance continues very large.

A SUCCESSION OF "CROWDED HOUSES" attests the success that has been achieved by "Humpty Dumpty," and in order to procure anything like eligible seats an early application is necessary. G. L. Fox as the clown and C. K. Fox as pantaloon, would be hard to equal, and in addition there is a host of talent, including the wonderful Marien Family, the infant bicycle performers, Mon. Willie, the sprite; Jeanrie Veasman, the infant character vocalist, and numerous other attractions, not forgetting the bright, picturesque scenery and sprightly music.

MRS. CHAS. FOSTER, the wife of the dramatist of "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl," produced on Wednesday, Oct. 4th, a fifth "Bertha," weighing about twelve pounds. Mr. Foster informs us this production is not for sale.

AT NIBLO'S GARDEN the "Streets of New York" was produced on Monday evening, Sept. 25th, with the following cast:—

PROLOGUE.—1857.

| | |
|---|---|
| Tom Badger | Frank Mayo |
| Capt. Fairweather | C. H. Morton |
| Badger | Frank Mayo |
| Bob | C. T. Parsloe |
| Mr. Puffy | Harry Pearson |
| Gideon Bloodgood | W. R. Laurens |
| Paul Fairweather | A. H. Davenport |
| Mark Livingstone | Murdock |
| Dan | Philip Stoner |
| Gideon Bloodgood | W. R. Laurens |
| Edwards | Mr. Howard |
| Jim | Master Sniffen |
| Edwards | Mr. Howard |
| Policemen | E. K. Collier, L. R. Stockwell |
| Lucy Fairweather | Miss Susan Denin |
| Alida Bloodgood | Miss S. Denin |
| Mrs. Fairweather | Miss M. Carr |
| Mrs. Puffy | Mrs. Wright |

The drama was well mounted and had the advantage of freshly painted scenery. The fire scene in the fifth act was very elaborate and created a deal of enthusiasm. In addition to the hand engine usually employed in this scene, a steam engine, fired up, and drawn by two horses was used, which much enhanced the realistic effect. Mr. Frank Mayo as Badger widely departed from the conventional portraiture of that character. He interpolated freely language of his own and introduced much business original with himself, which, if judged by the rules of criticism, might be condemned, but yielding to public taste must be commended. In other words, he has sensationalized the drama. That it is humorous it cannot be denied, as he keeps the audience convulsed with laughter whenever he is upon the stage. His acting is natural, quiet, easy and effective. Charles H. Morton's impersonation of Capt. Fairweather was effective. Gideon Bloodgood found a fair representative in W. R. Laurens, who was content to act in a quiet and unrestrained manner. Charles T. Parsloe acted Bob, the bootblack, in which his excellence is patent, and on the Union square scene he introduced his pupil, Master Sniffen, who performed a song and dance so acceptably that it was re-demanded. Harry Pearson, as Puffy, of which character he was the original representative, deserves commendation. A. H. Davenport, likewise the original Paul Fairweather, acted with his usual correctness. Frank Murdoch was quite acceptable as Mark Livingston. Philip Stoner individualized the character of Dan, one of the old-time fire laddies, and won considerable favor from the audience. E. K. Collier, as the Policeman, was natural and life-like. Mr. Howard gave an eccentric personation of the servant Edwards. Miss Susan Denin, who re-appeared after a lengthened absence from the New York stage, was warmly welcomed. She acted Alida Bloodgood vigorously, and was costumed in elegant taste. Miss Beasie Sheldow played Lucy Fairweather fairly, but we would mildly suggest that chignons were not worn in 1857, nor had the "Grecian Bend" then attracted the attention of fashionable young ladies. Miss Mary Carr gave a quiet, artistic portraiture of Mrs. Fairweather, and Mrs. Wright, with her natural fund of good humor, made Mrs. Puffy thoroughly enjoyable. Signor Operti, who appears to be indefatigable in his endeavors to keep the musical portion of the entertainment up to the standard, had composed a new overture, as well as new music for the drama, and introduced a new idea—that of playing a melody for the incidental music. Thus, during the Union square scene, when Mrs. Fairweather and her two children meet, imploring each other for charity, the air "Driven from Home" was played by the orchestra so pianissimo as not to interfere with the dialogue, and yet fell softly on the ear, as though being played at a great distance. The "Streets of New York" is announced for continued representation, and having a tracted a good attendance, will probably run until the commencement of Mr. Sothern's engagement.

AT BRYANT'S MINSTRELS an agreeable programme of familiar acts in the second part and some pleasing selections in the first are offered during the past week. Monroe Dempster sang "Evangeline." Dave Reed sang a song, describing in a humorous manner the Jerome Park races, with imitations on the bones; Louis Braham sang "Sweet Emeline;" J. A. Barney, "Sweet Warbling Birds;" Dan Bryant, a comic song, and W. F. Stanley, "Annie Lysle." In the second part, W. Henry Rice's burlesque ballads were received with favor. The "Clodoche Quadrille," "Spirit Rappings," with Dan Bryant and Billy Brockway, Little Comic and "Mesmerism," imitations on the bones by Dave Reed, "Divorce," Morrissey and Emerson's songs and dance, "Daniel in the Bryant's Den," and the sketch, "Ah's Well that Ends Well," constituted the features.

AT THE SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS the brief pantomime of "Fox and Goose" continued one of the chief attractions of the past week. An engravable first part gave D. W. Wambold, Billy Birch, Charley Backus and Billy Rice an opportunity to display their musical and humorous qualities. In the second part, a festival song and dance called "Fritz and Katrina" was performed by J. Cheever and Ed Kennedy. Then J. Salcedo performed a fantasie upon the cornet-a-piston, succeeding which came a sketch called the "Happy Family," with Bernard, Backus, Birch and Billy West. A song and dance written and performed by Bobby Newcomb, entitled "Shadows on the Wall," was then performed, which gave place to the "Unbleached Blonde," by Ernest Linden. Gibbons, Cheever and Kennedy then performed a triple clog dance, after which Billy West with his banjo sang several songs and the patomime referred to closed the entertainment.

THE FOURTH ANNUAL BENEFIT OF the B. and P. O. of Elks is announced to take place at the Academy of Music on Thursday afternoon, Oct. 12th, when a large array of talent from all the minstrel halls of this city and elsewhere will appear in their various specialties. As this association is somewhat renowned for its charitable deeds the patrons of this entertainment will be pleased to know that the amount of money they expend for their own enjoyment may hereafter benefit some deserving performer.

MISS LUCILLE WESTERN and J. A. Herne acted every evening during the past week at Wood's Museum in the drama entitled "Oliver Twist." The performances of these artists in the respective characters of Nancy and Bill Sikes are so well known as to need no comment at the present time. At the Saturday matinee a change of performance was made, when Miss Western acted Mrs. Haller in the "Stranger." At the other matinees during the week the "Chimney Corner" was acted.

THE PAREPA-ROSA ENGLISH OPERA COMPANY inaugurated their season at the Academy of Music on Oct. 2d. The initial performance presented an English version of Donizetti's "Fille du Regiment," with a cast embracing M'me Rosa as Marie; Tom Karl, who made his American debut, as Tonio; Aynsley Cook as Sulspice, and Mrs. Cook as the Marchioness, assisted by Ellis Ryse in the role of Hortensio, and Mr. Gustavus Hall as the Corporal. The opera was placed upon the stage with new costumes and stage appointments, and unusual attention to the excellence of the mise en scene, the improvement manifested in the choral department being especially noteworthy. The attendance was remarkable for its fashionable character, and the presence of an unusually numerous delegation of musical critics, artists and literateurs. M'me Rosa received quite an ovation as she appeared in the first act, and during the evening was enthusiastically encored for her spirited aria, "Pour me rapeler," I adore Thee," eliciting a loud recall. The new tenor, Mr. Carl, despite a nervousness incident to the circumstances of his appearance, made a most favorable impression, and was loudly encored in the interpolated song. Mr. Cook evinced great dramatic ability as well as vocal powers of more than ordinary merit in his interpretation of the Sergeant, and Mrs. Cook made quite a hit as the Marchioness in the sung lesson, in which Madame Rosa's brilliant powers of execution were also heard to much advantage. The orchestra was under the baton of that able maestro Carl Rosa, and the instrumentation was quite a feature of the performance. On Oct. 3d the company repeated the "Daughter of the Regiment" to another crowded assemblage, and on the 4th inst. they performed the "Bohemian Girl," with the popular tenor and baritone, Castle and Campbell, in the principal roles, and Miss Clara Doria, who made her American debut, in the role of Arline. On the 6th the ever popular "Martha" was given, with Madame Rosa in the title role, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Seguin—two old established favorites—and Messrs. Castle and Campbell and others. Notwithstanding the storm a large audience was present on the 7th to hear the matinee of "Daughter of the Regiment" as repeated, and although the "Bohemian Girl" was announced for the evening performance, it was not given, as it was thought advisable to devote the evening to a thorough rehearsal of Balfe's opera, entitled "Satanella; or, The Power of Love," which is announced for production this evening, and in which M'me Vanzini will make her re entree in the title role.

AT WOOD'S MUSEUM the comedy of the "Rivals" was repeated on Monday evening, Oct. 2d. On Tuesday the "Heir at Law" received its first representation this season before an audience quite limited in numbers, owing, in a great measure, to a heavy shower of rain at the time of opening the doors. The comedy was presented with nearly the same cast as during the past season with the exception of Caroline Dormer, which was acted by Miss Mary Lenoyr, who made her first appearance at this theatre on the evening in question. She evidently suffered much from nervousness as her attitudes were constrained and her elocution was too declamatory and of the high tragedy order. She has a good figure, a pleasing face and a good voice, her enunciation being very clear and distinct. After she has had a little more practice and has accustomed the pitch of her voice to the size of the auditorium we have no doubt she will prove a valuable addition to the company. Mr. Montgomery played Zekiel Homespun in an easy, natural manner and with quite a depth of feeling. His dialect was good, and he may be regarded as a valuable acquisition to the company. G. F. Browne made his re-appearance in the character of Steadfast. On Wednesday the "Serious Family" introduced Mr. John Brougham as Captain Murphy Maguire, who was most cordially received. Miss Lenoyle acted Emma Torrens, which was the only change from the usual cast. On Thursday the "Rivals," on Friday the "Heir at Law," and on Saturday the 'Serious Family" were repeated. The farce entitled "40 and 50" was acted on Saturday night for the first time this season. This evening, Oct. 9th, Miss Plessy Mordaunt is announced to make her American debut, acting Mrs. Oakley in the "Jealous Wife."

AT THE UNION SQUARE THEATRE, on the evening of Tuesday, Oct. 3d, the burlesque extravaganza entitled the "Babes in the Wood" was acted. Miles. Bonfanti and Bertha were announced to have appeared in the divertissement entitled the "Home of the Butterflies," but neither they nor the corps de ballet appeared at all during the evening. Masters Frederick and Willie Matthews appeared in an acrobatic performance with chairs, which was cleverly given. Miss Annie Adams and Fred. Foster sang a number of songs. Some Ethiopian sketches, songs and dances, and the performances of the Matthews Family in acrobatic exercises, concluded the performances.

DAN RICE'S PARIS PAVILION CIRCUS has attracted good sized audiences, save on the rainy nights of Tuesday and Friday, who appear to have been well pleased with the various acts of equitation, the gymnastic and acrobatic feats, the humors of the clowns, the instinct amounting almost to reason of the trained horse, Excelsior, Jr., while the comic mules, Pete and Barney, have sent the audiences to their homes in the best of humor.

THE GLOBE THEATRE collapsed again after the performance of Wednesday night, Oct. 4th, the season having proved a disastrous failure.

JOHN STETSON, one of the managers of the Howard Athenæum, Boston, Mass., is announced to open the Globe Theatre, Oct. 16th, with a full variety troupe from the above named theatre, Boston, Mass.

THE THEATRE COMIQUE, 514 Broadway, is announced to open for a season under the management of Josh. Hart on Oct. 16th.

JOHN MCDONOUGH and H. A. Earnshaw have secured the theatre located on Twenty-eighth street, near Broadway, lately occupied by Newcomb and Arlington's Minstrels, which they have renamed the St. James Theatre, and which they propose to open on Monday evening, Oct. 23d. Among the attractions to be offered are Miss Susan Galton's opera troupe and E. D. Davies, a celebrated vocalist from the Polytechnic Institute, London, Eng.

MLLE. AIMEE was to have commenced a series of opera bouffe performances at Lina Edwin's Theatre on Friday evening, Oct. 6th, but owing to the illness of M. Jullien, a tenor, was compelled to postpone the opening until this evening, Oct. 9th, when the same opera, "La Perichole," is announced to be sung, with M. Noe in the role of Piquillo instead of M. Jullien.

AT THE BOWERY THEATRE, Miss Kate Fisher and her trained horse, Wonder, have appeared during the past week. On Monday and Tuesday evenings Miss Fisher acted in "Maseppa," which was preceded by the "Married Bachelor." On Wednesday and Thursday in "Putnam, the Iron Son of '76," and "Handsome Jack, the Highwayman" was acted by the stock company. On Friday in the "Three Fast Men," preceded by the "Married Bachelor," and on Saturday in the "French Spy" and "Jack Sheppard," both on horseback.

THE MARRIAGE of the SEASON with Our Society seems to have had a peculiar effect upon its musical critic. We excerpt the following from its columns of the issue of Oct. 7th:—

M'lle Aimee's attractive enterprise, which opened last night at Lina Edwin's Opera Theatre, is destined to

ment on the old arrangement. This week the "School for Scandal" is the principal feature of the programme.

THE NEW OPERA HOUSE, Utica, N. Y., is described as follows by our correspondent, writing on Oct. 7th:—"The building has a frontage of 151 feet on Fayette street, is 151 feet deep, and 70 feet high. The main entrance is on Fayette street, and is 16 feet wide. From this ascends a staircase to the lobby and ticket office. To the right and left are two staircases leading to a spacious gallery lobby. Beyond the ticket office is a corridor, from which three large folding doors open into the auditorium of the opera house, which is divided into a parquet and dress circle, which have a reclining capacity of about 1,000. The gallery will seat 1200. There are two private boxes on either side of the stage, which are richly carpeted and furnished, and finished in white and gold. The stage is 42 feet deep, is provided with all the modern machinery, and has 22 changes of scenery. The drop curtain, which is 36x36 feet, represents a villa and fountain in Rome. The dressing and property rooms are capacious and fitted with all the modern improvements. The entire building is heated by steam, and is lighted by a pneumatic chandelier, pendant from the centre of the ceiling. The parquet, dress circle and gallery are furnished with patent folding chairs. The walls and ceiling are most beautifully frescoed, and in each of the four corners of the ceiling are figures representing music, tragedy, comedy and mechanics. In addition to the main entrance, a flight of stairs, east of the stage and sixteen feet wide, opening on Washington street will be used as a means of exit. The frescoing was done by Signors Bottani and Rusca, scenic painting by F. Stanfield, the mechanical and stage effects by E. D. Carver, both of Buffalo, N. Y. The whole has been under the control of Mr. John Abercrombie, the present superintendent, who is deserving of much praise. It will be opened by N. O. Forrester on Oct. 16th."

AT THE NEW OPERA HOUSE, Rochester, N. Y., our correspondent, writing on Oct. 7th, says:—"On Oct. 2d the stock company presented the play of the 'Streets of New York,' with the favorite, J. Clinton Hall, as Badger. The entire company gave good satisfaction, and were the recipients of much applause. On the 3d inst. was played 'Lost in London' and 'Nobody's Child,' by the stock company, and on the 4th Miss Jean Hosmer made her first appearance as Lucretia Borgia in the play of that name to a full house. On the 5th she played in 'Elizabeth', and on the sixth she was billed to play in 'Jezebel,' but a short time before the opening of the doors a telegram was received announcing the death of Miss Hosmer's father at Buffalo. Miss Louise Peterson, of the stock company, was called upon to read Miss Hosmer's part, and did so excellently well. To-night 'Lost in London' and 'La Tour de Nesle' by the stock. Oliver Doud Byron opens on the 9th inst. in 'Across the Continent.'"

MARION WENTWORTH, English burlesque actress, will shortly arrive in this country, and can be addressed as per advertisement.

THOMAS WHARNEY, a youth of nineteen, who has done monkey parts, advertises for an engagement with a pantomime troupe.

KATE RAYMOND is prepared to negotiate engagements through her agent, Harry Cunningham, to appear in her new play, "Waifs of New York."

A HEAVY MAN is wanted for the Richmond Theatre. See advertisement.

STARS and combinations, having open dates, are referred to John T. Ford's card elsewhere. Mr. Ford controls two theatres in Baltimore, and Pike's Opera House, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE STAGE IN SAN FRANCISCO is thus penographed by our regular correspondent, dated Sept. 26th:—"At the Metropolitan Theatre 'Adrienne; or, The Duel in the Mist,' a four-act melo-drama, has held the boards during the week. The piece, though florid in coloring, has merit in the matter of being well constructed and in keeping up a sustained interest to the end. It was fairly placed on the stage as regards scenery, while the costumes of the supernumeraries, especially those representing the military, were bright and well ordered. The cast embraced J. H. Hardie as Eugene DeGrassac, H. Colton as Victor Savignie, J. H. Maguire as Louis Herman, J. H. Vinson as Bertrand, John Woodward as Jacopo Scarrotta, Frank Rea as Sargeant Buriet, Mrs. F. S. Bates as Adrienne De Beaupre, Mrs. Frank Rea as Mme. Beaupre, and Fanny Young as Gianneita Scarrotta. Mr. John Allen, assisted by Miss Alice Harrison, will commence an engagement Oct. 2d in "Schneider."..... Mrs. Bowers, during this, her fourth week at the California, has d awn excellent audiences. The principal novelty was the production, on the 25th and 27th, of Shakespeare's 'King John.' Three short scenes, wonderful in their graphic expression, alone rescue the play from oblivion, and these comprise the two interviews between King John and Hubert and the one between Hubert and Arthur, in the latter of which the springs of emotion are mirrored in exquisite beauty and truth. If 'King John' is to be produced at all it should be as a spectacular piece; elaborately mounted and costumed it would form a fine archæological study. The play was cleverly acted and a few costumes were histrionically correct, notably those of McCullough, Edwards and Leathes. Mrs. Bowers' Constance was an acceptable performance, but it is to be doubted whether the character was altogether a congenial one. McCullough's King John was cold, crafty and impressive, and Edward's Falconbridge was thoroughly bluff and hearty, but lacked something in dash. Carden misinterpreted the physical appearance of Hubert entirely, making him a dreadful ogre, frightful in aspect and face; otherwise a fair conception was respectably carried out. Mestayer, who is essentially an eccentric actor, was also inadequate in the part of King Philip, lacking sufficient dignity to maintain the idea of royalty. On the 26th 'School for Scandal' was repeated; on the 28th 'East Lynne' was produced to the largest house of the season; on the 29th 'Much Ado About Nothing' was presented for the benefit of Mrs. Bowers, and this evening the week closes with a repetition of 'Macbeth.' On Monday, October 2d, the production of Andrew Halliday's new historical drama, 'Amy Robsart,' occurred, with new scenery and the following distribution of characters:—

.....There were several changes in the programme at the Alhambra during the week. In the first part Charles Ashton sang 'Under the Willow She is Sleeping,' Charley Howard rendered with a wealth of comic power 'Carry the News to Mary,' Ainsley Scott was heard to advantage in 'Aura Lee,' Billy Emerson upset the audience with 'The Telegraph' song, and Signor Bideaux sang 'Have Charity.' In the second part the new features were a clog dance by Sheridan and Mack, 'The Drum Major' by Billy Emerson, 'The Champion Nigger Dancers' by Coghill and Cooper, and the farce 'Turn Him Out.' Business continues good."

THE ABBOTT PANTOMIME TROUPE opened at White's Hall, Toledo, O., Oct. 2d, for two nights. A well filled auditorium greeted the company on their first appearance in that city, and a good impression was made. Charley Abbott, in his role of clown, kept the audience in a continual roar with his mirth-provoking antics whenever he appeared. The Ravels, Winter and Sophie, as harlequin and columbine, are clever performers, and their graceful dancing was much relished. Between the acts Jerry Cohan appeared in his character sketches and songs and dances. The appearance of the Aloe Brothers was an event of the evening. Their skating was graceful in the extreme, and it is to be regretted that the narrowness of the stage prevented a more extensive display of their powers.

T. G. RIGGS, under the management of Jno. P. Smith, gave two performances of "Shin Fane," at the Opera House, Newark, N. J., Oct. 2d and 4th, to good houses. Mr. Riggs was well supported..... Miss Clara Norris, assisted by a New York dramatic company, gave a performance of 'Lucretia Borgia," Oct. 5th, before a fair audience. Miss Norris failed to make an impression in this character, although fairly supported..... J. C. Campbell, under the management of John P. Smith, opened on Oct. 7th, for two nights, in "Pomp; or, Way down South." So writes our correspondent Oct. 7th.

THE RAKIN COMEDY COMPANY performed during the past week in Terre Haute, Indiana, to fair business.

MARSTON AND STONE'S Dramatic Company is billed to perform at Springfield, Ill., Oct. 13th and 14th.

ALBERT W. AIKEN and his dramatic company is billed to perform at Bridgeport, Conn., Oct. 9th.

T. G. RIGGS is announced to play in "Shin Fane" at Bridgeport, Conn., Oct. 10th, and J. C. Campbell in "Pomp" on the 14th.

HIGGINS AND MAXWELL'S DRAMATIC COMPANY performed during the past week at Danbury, Conn. Miss Annie Ward Tiffany was the star. Mr. Maxwell has purchased Mr. Higgins' interest, and the company is billed ahead as follows:—Brewster's Station, Oct. 9th, 10th and 11th; Millerstown, 12th, 13th and 14th; Dover, 16th; Amenia, 17th and 18th; Chatham, 19th, 20th and 21st, and Schenectady, 23d, 24th and 25th.

MARK SMITH AND HIS COMEDY COMPANY is billed to perform in Corinthian Hall, Rochester, N. Y., Oct. 11th, 12th and 13th.

J. DELMON GRACE, to whose helpless condition we have often alluded, we are happy to announce is to have a benefit at Providence, R. I., on November 2d. Messrs. Cory and Harrington have generously tendered the free use of their opera house, Broom and Reeves their full band, and the City Bill Posting Company their services.

J. L. HALL'S dramatic company performed during the past week at Providence, R. I.

AMUSEMENTS IN BOSTON, MASS., are written about by our regular correspondent, "Zoug-Zoug," on Oct. 8th:—"The event at the Museum the past week was the production of W. S. Gilbert's fairy comedy entitled the 'Palace of Truth.' The story of its plot you have already published. It is, however, very witty and very spirited in its action, the second act being decidedly the best. The most successful of the performers were Miss Annie Clarke as Zeolide, Miss Laura Phillips as Azema, Mr. Barron as Prince Philamir and Mr. Bakdell as Crysal. Miss Phillips, in particular, made the most of the character assigned to her and was a positive success. The play has been followed by a farce called 'Birth Place of Podgers,' in which Mr. Warren struggled to amuse and failed, because there was nothing funny nor amusing in the dialogue. Fortunately it was withdrawn. For the coming week the announcements are:—Monday, 'Palace of Truth' and 'My Turn Next;' Tuesday, 'A Soot for Scandal;' Wednesday, 'My Uncle's Will' and 'Sweethearts and Wives;' Friday and Saturday, 'Wild Oats.' The management have also in preparation 'Great Expectations,' by W. S. Gilbert, which will probably have its first representation in this country at the Museum.....At the Globe Mr. Owens has acted in 'Solon Shingle,' preceded the first part of the week by 'the Happiest Day of My Life' and the last part by 'The Victims,' except at the Saturday matinee, when the 'Captain of the Watch' preceded it. All of these pieces have given great satisfaction and have drawn full houses. For the coming week, the attraction is to be 'Dot,' with Mr. Owens as Caleb Plummer, Mrs. Barry will play 'Dot,' Tom 'Live Indian' is in rehearsal here, and Mr. Floyd has in active preparation Mr. Daly's comedy, 'Dr. Ice.' On Sunday evenings, beginning with this evening, Mr. Jas. E. Murdoch will give a series of readings at the theatre, consisting of scriptural and choice poetic selections.....At the Boston Theatre the Lydia Thompson Troupe brought their engagement to an end with flying colors on Oct. 7th. They have had very large houses at every performance. Some of the burlesques of the week are spoken as satisfactory as 'Blue Beard.' Lurline was not so enjoyable as last year, on account of the non-appearance of Mr. Edouin, and the consequent cutting down of the part hitherto played by him; he, however, appeared on Wednesday in the 'Princess of Trebisonde,' and was heartily received. He made the hit of the evening. On Friday Miss Lydia Thompson received a benefit, when an overflowing house was attracted by 'Blondes' and 'Beauties.' Grimes' card scene from 'Blue Beard,' she was summoned before the curtain and thanked the audience in a neat speech. The same bill was repeated Saturday night. Monday night the opera of 'Faust' in the attraction, with the principal characters cast as follows:—Marguerite, Mlle Mitchell; Siebel, Miss Cary; Faust, M. Canon; Valentine, M. Barre; Mephisto, M. Talbot. Miss Mitchell is having musical directory, there every indication of a large attendance. Tuesday, the 'Barber of Seville,' with Ronconi as Figaro; Wednesday, 'Lucia di Lammermour,' with Nilsson as Lucia, and Thursday 'Martha' will be sung. On Saturday night the Adelaide company will give an entertainment. On Thursday afternoon, Oct. 12th, the Boston Theatre will be opened for a benefit to Mr. Billy Sheppard, late of the Howard Athenæum. The members of the companies at the St. James and the Howard have offered their services, and a pleasant time is given of a good performance."

MR. CHARLES MATHEWS was the stellar attraction at the National Theatre, Washington, D. C., during the past week. Our correspondent, writing on Oct. 9th, says:—"The bill on the opening night consisted of 'Married for Money' and 'Cool as a Cucumber,' both of which passed off very nicely. The audience, however, was not as large as the merits of Mr. Mathews deserved, but on the second evening a slight increase in the attendance was noticed. On Wednesday and Thursday evenings still larger audiences assembled, and the programme was changed to 'If I Had a Thousand a Year,' 'Patter versus Clatter' and 'Gatherwood.' Mr. Mathews yesterday afternoon appeared before a very large audience of ladies and children.....Wall's Opera House was opened for the first time, this season, on the 2d instant, with Prof. Risley's Wallsala Troupe as the attraction. Miss Lucie Chinchio, a very graceful danseuse, and the Collins Bros., song and dance men, have recently been added to the troupe, and now it is one of the best organizations traveling. The Collins Brothers (they are not at all related) are among the best song and dance and clog performers that have appeared here in a long time. On the 9th the 'peerless' Moriacchi appears in the 'French Spy' supported by the dramatic company from the Holiday Street Theatre, Baltimore, Md. The Majiltons are announced to appear in conjunction with Moriacchi."

AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Buffalo, N. Y., the drama of "Across the Continent," with Oliver Doud Byron as the star, has been the attraction of the entire week. Our correspondent writing on Oct. 7th, says:—"The houses have been crowded. The cast comprises the full strength of the company. Mr. Byron assumes the character of Joe Ferris, alias the Ferret, in which his talents are fully developed. The support throughout was highly creditable. In the prologue, Mr. Mordaunt, as John Alderly, enacted the Five Points runner-in with naturalness. Mr. Wright personated the victim of delerium tremens to the life. The part of Thomas Goodwin, a kind-hearted merchant, was ably portrayed by Mr. Haviland. The character of Dennis O'Dwyer was given with happy effect by Mr. Rogers. Miss Waugh, as Agnes Constant, rendered the part with patnos. The part of Bridget O'Dwyer, by Mrs. Hodges, was ably given. In the play proper, Mr. Mordaunt appeared as the son of John Alderley of the prologue. There is a quietude and coolness in Mr. M's impersonations that invariably pleases the audiences. In the second and third acts this sang froid was admirably assumed, and as a renegade Indian leader in the last act his make-up and acting were excellent. Mr. Rogers, as Knuckle-bone Johnny, gave a capital rendition of a rollicking, good-hearted vagabond. The part of Thomas Goodwin, Jr., was well portrayed by Mr. Wright, who improves rapidly. Mr. Gray was fair as Giovanni, an organ-grinder. Mr. Howard, as Bilky, deserves praise. Little Louise Locken, as Dolore, gave a charming interpretation of the poor Italian waif. The parts of Giga and Beppina, by Misses Smith and Thompson, were happily rendered, interlarded with songs and dances creditably given. Cæsar Augustus was rendered by Mr. Hodges in good style; Louise and Clara Goodwin, by Misses Waugh and Thompson, were given with grace and in a lady-like manner, and Susie Lillis, a femme de chambre of the old maid persuasion, by Mrs. Hodges, who enacted the part with animation. Mr. Vickers as an M. P., gave satisfaction. The telegraph scene, in the last act, deserves especial commendation. On Oct. 9th, Mr. Joseph Murphy will open for one week, producing his specialty of 'Help.'"

WM. HORACE LINGARD, supported by Miss Alice Dunning (Lingard), Miss Dickie Lingard and an excellent company, writes our correspondent, on Oct. 7th:—"Performed to good business at Wieting Opera House, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 5th and 7th. The programme the first evening consisted of Mr. Lingard's character sketches and the comedies of 'Naval Engagements' and 'Marriage at any Price.' For their second entertainment they performed 'Edie; or, The Cherry Tree Inn' in a very creditable manner, Miss Dunning and Mr. John Matthews appearing to excellent advantage on both occasions. The company go from here to Auburn N. Y....Mark Smith's Comedy Company is announced to perform the 'Rivals,' Oct. 9th; also 'London Assurance,' Oct. 10th, and 'School for Scandal,' Oct. 11th."

THE PARK THEATRE, Brooklyn, was largely attended during the second week of Johnny Thompson's performance in "On Hand," but the houses were not crowded to the extent they were the first week. Mr. Couldock appears this week in McCloskey's new play entitled "The Trail of the Serpent," with Mrs. Jennie Carroll as the heroine and McCloskey himself in the cast.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS IN ALBANY, N. Y., are reported as follows by our correspondent, under date of Oct. 7th:—"The past week having been fair week, of course there were a great many strangers in town, which made theatricals lively. The Trimble Opera House has been doing well with the stock. 'Life's Revenge' received its first performance in this city on the 2d and was repeated on the 3d. The 'Sea of Ice' was played on the 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th. On the 9th Johnny Thompson will be 'On Hand'..... Little Nell proved a success the first week of her engagement at the Capitol Theatre, but her second week was more than successful. She, with 'Bertha,' has crowded the house nightly. Little Nell personated the part of Bertha Bascomb in an excellent manner. The performance was somewhat marred by the rather shaky performance of the part of Lisette Graham by Miss May Nugent. The other characters were very well done. Little Nell goes from here to Toronto, C. E. Kate Fisher opens at Ilion Hall on the 9th in 'Mazeppa.'" It is some years since this place has been performed in this city, and will probably draw largely. James Maguire, with Wm. Vershay's drama of "Over the Falls," opens at this house on the 21st .... E. T. Stetson & Co., at Martin Hall, did not do very well. Among the company was Georgie Langley, Mrs. E. Le Brun and W. L. Street, old favorites..... The Aiken will appear on the 14th at Martin Hall."

J. K. EMMET is billed to perform at Providence, R. I., Oct. 9th and 10th.

A TERRIBLE CONFLAGRATION is raging in Chicago, Ill., while we write, and the latest intelligence we have leads us to believe that Wood's Museum, the Crosby Opera House, Hooley's Opera House and the Dearborn Theatre are all destroyed. Our usual Chicago letter has not come to hand, and the telegraph office has been burned. It is said that one half of the city is in ruins, and that a distance of five miles has been burned over. We will be able to give full particulars in our next issue.

W. H. LINGARD and company is announced to perform in Detroit, Mich., Oct. 9th and 10th.

NEWS THEATRICAL FROM SACRAMENTO, CAL., and other towns on the Pacific slope, are reported as follows by our correspondent, writing on Oct. 1st:—"Good business throughout the week has attended the efforts of manager Proctor at the Metropolitan Theatre. The excellent stock company engaged grows in popular favor, and the entertainments presented are worthy of the highest praise. The following is the programme of the week past: Monday and Tuesday nights, 'After Dark'; Wednesday and Thursday, 'Kathleen Mavourneen'; Friday night, 'Sweethearts and Wives' and the burlesque of 'Ernani'; Saturday, 'After Dark' and the farce 'Turn him Out.' To-morrow, Monday, Oct. 2d, Mr. F. Bates, a very talented, pleasing actress, commences an engagement of six nights, appearing in the dual characters of Lady Isabel and Madame Vine, in the drama of 'East Lynne.' During the lady's engagement she will present her new play of 'Pigeon the Torment,' a companion piece to 'Fanchon.' A movement is on foot to give a grand complimentary benefit to that sterling actor, Mr. Leman, as present a member of the Metropolitan Company. It is in the hands of some of the most prominent men of the city, and is intended as a recognition of the valuable services of Mr. Leman during the late sanguinarial election..... A dramatic company under the management of R. H. Cox has been performing at Petaluma during the past week. Pierpont Thayer was stage manager..... The New York Mammoth Circus performed on the 29th inst. in the County Fair, which commenced Sept. 25th and closed yesterday. They did a rushing business..... Mrs. F. W. Lander commenced a short engagement at the Salt Lake, Utah Territory, Theatre, on Sept. 25th..... Proctor's Dramatic Company, of this city, is to perform at Marysville during the continuance of the Yuba County Fair, which commences at that city on the 9th inst..... Dan R. Sample, business manager of the Sacramento Record, of this city, died here yesterday of congestion of the brain, after an illness of one week. Deceased was very much esteemed and well known in dramatic circles of this coast."

MISS MARIAN MORDAUNT is having a play written for her by T. B. De Walden, introducing some fine changes of character. She proposes starring on a tour through the country with the same about the middle of December.

Variety Halls.

To Managers, Agents, Doorkeepers and Others.

Every regularly authorized correspondent of the NEW YORK CLIPPER is supplied with the necessary credentials, in the shape of a card, with an engraving of the CLIPPER Building on one side, and on the other the name of the correspondent, city, etc., signed by the proprietor of the paper, with the stamp of the office, and date of Sept. 1st, 1871, affixed thereto, each card running for six months, when new ones will be issued on the return of the old, but one representative being recognized in each place. We particularly request that managers of entertainments will decline extending favors to any person representing himself as correspondent of this paper who cannot produce the card referred to. By acceding to this request, managers will not be imposed on by irresponsible parties. Cards are only issued to correspondents of the amusement department of this paper. Parties applying for the position of correspondent are respectfully requested to consider silence a negative.

ARTISTS are wanted for the Theatre Comique, New Haven, Conn. Address as per advertisement.

LITTLE SAMMY UNSWORTH, song and dance artist, who can be addressed care of this office, wants an engagement.

JENNIE KIMBALL and her sister are noticed as follows by the Syracuse Daily Journal:—

Wild's Opera House.—Miss Jennie Kimball and sister were the leading attractions at Wild's last night. They appeared in their dashing character roles and were received with rounds of applause. Their costumes were rich and elegant and their acting surpasses anything of the kind ever seen in this city. They are to appear again this evening, on the occasion of the benefit to Messrs. Shimer and Foley.

AT THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Bay City, Mich., business has been very fair during the week. Billy Devere closed a very successful engagement Sept. 30th. He opened at Smith's Opera House, East Saginaw, Oct. 2d, remaining only three nights; thence to Chicago, where he opens Oct. 11th. Belle Hord, vocalist, opens here Oct. 16th. On the boards this week are Miss Lizzie Sherman, vocalist; Charlie Adams, comedian; Harry Watson, song and dance; Maude Howard, danseuse; Eva Brekner and Annie Sherwood, vocalist; Ed Judge, barjoist. G. Brooks Clark is stage manager. So wrote our correspondent, Oct. 5th.

AT THE FRONT STREET THEATRE COMIQUE, BALTIMORE, Md., a new series of attractions was offered on Oct. 2d and during the week, and the house was consequently liberally patronized. The new faces were Alf. Burnett, humorist, who appeared in conjuction with Miss Helen Nash, the elocutionist, in "Caudle's Curtain Lecture' and met with a favorable reception; J. W. Sharpey, the contortionist, who was frequently encored; Messrs. Quitter and Goodrich, the clever Ethiopian song and dance artists. Rollin Howard and Charley Burgess are still here, appearing in a laughable sketch called "O-li-i-O," as also are Billy Carter, the proficient banjoist; Mlle. Tarrell, vocalist; Frank Gibsons, the ambidexian performer, and Miss Martha Wren, a pretty and bewitching young lady, who appeared with James Collier in several negro sketches. Miss Rosenleberg and Pagani and the ballet appeared in a divertissement entitled the "Vivandieres of the South." The afterpiece was "A Dark Cloud; or, the Shadow of Guilt." Miss Jennie Hughes, the vocalist, is underlined for Oct. 9th..... At the Baltimore Opera House Prof. Robert Heller, the magician and ventriloquist; Jennie Howard, the vocalist, and Lizzie Louise, danseuse, were the new appearances, all of whom were favorably received. Annie Hindle continues here, appearing in the sketch "Barney's Courtship," which proves a great success; also Otto Burbank and Dick Parker in their Ethiopian delineations. Jennie Benson, and a number of other novelties, are announced for next week. So wrote our correspondent on Oct. 6th.

THE HYAMS SISTERS closed their engagement at Petersburg, Va., Oct. 7th. Miss Mollie Somers is announced to commence there to-night, Oct. 9th.

LEW PIKE'S THEATRE COMIQUE COMPANY performed at Bridgeport, Conn., Oct. 7th.

A SONG AND DANCE LADY, a danseuse, a serio comic vocalist and a comedian are wanted for Edwards' Sensation Troupe. Address as per advertisement.

E. M. GOWOLD is requested to address Charley Shay, whose route find elsewhere.

THE LITTLE FRENCH TWIN SISTERS, double character dancers, at present performing at the Howard Athenæum, Boston, are engaged after Oct. 14th, through Col. T. A. Brown's agency.

J. H. MILLBURN and a variety company are announced to perform at Bangor, Me., Oct. 9th and 10th, and Belfast, 11th.

JOSEPH K. SNYDER, clog dancer, was married at Boston, Mass., by the Rev. S. K. LaBarge, on Sept. 30th, to Miss Annie E. Aitken, of New York city.

ADAM RICHMOND'S BURLESQUE AND VAUDEVILLE COMPANY, from the Howard Athenæum, Boston, is billed to perform at Hartford, Conn., Oct. 2d; Springfield, Mass., 3d; Bridgeport, Conn., 4th; New Haven, 5th; Newark, N. J., 6th; Paterson, 7th; Brooklyn, N. Y., 9th and 10th; Poughkeepsie, 11th; Albany, 12th; Troy, 13th, and Worcester, Mass., 14th.

THE PHILADELPHIA VARIETIES, Philadelphia, is now under the sole management of Mr. Joseph M. Mortimer, he having purchased the interest of his late partner. The programme last week commenced with the farce, "Did You Ever Send Your Wife to Manayunk," in which Messrs. H. W. Williams and G. R. Radcliffe sustained their respective characters with much ability. The Daley Brothers appeared in several songs and dances. A ballet entitled "Enchantment" is performed by Miss Lucy Clifton, Fanny Fordham, Emma Bruce, Lida Wells and the ballet corps, which will be strengthened this week by the re-appearance of M'lle Giovanni Mazzeri, the favorite premier danseuse. The singing and dancing of the ballet corps in the song and dance "My Darling Mignonette," are very agreeably rendered, and the serio-comic songs of Miss Leo Gordon well deserve the applause bestowed upon them. Messrs. Mowatt Brothers display a good deal of nerve, agility and strength in their gymnastic feats. The comic singing of Billy Pastor continues to be a prominent feature of the entertainment. John Mulligan appeared to much advantage in the comic sketch of "The Sports on a Lark," and also as the door-keeper in "The Hop at Cape May." John concluded the second and last week of his engagement on the 7th inst. This week, the Ravennies, gymnasts, put in a first appearance, and Lew Brimmer, banjoist, and Mlle. Giovanni Mazzeri, danseuse, make their re-appearance. Miss Emma Grattan and Sam Devere are underlined to appear here shortly.

AT THE OLYMPIC MUSIC HALL, Philadelphia, Patsy Shay has been added to the company, which now includes M'lle Henriette, Louisa Wray, Billy Wright and others.

AT SANFORD'S NEW OPERA HOUSE, Philadelphia, the attendance has been fair during the past week, the principal features being "Blinks and Jinks," "Mr. and Mrs. Brown" and "Among the 18th Ward." On the 9th inst. Miss Agnes Robinson, M'lle Leonetta and Mons. Devirde will put in a first appearance.

FROM CINCINNATI we have the following, from our correspondent, up to Oct. 6th:—"At the Race Street Varieties business for the past week or so has been exceptional, the number of strangers in town probably assisting greatly. Miss Minnie Myers and Miss Mary St. Clair were both billed to appear here this week, and both failed to come to time for some reason, Miss Allie Sprague commenced an engagement last evening (Thursday). She ended an engagement which had lasted fully two years last spring, and whether she commenced an equally lengthy one remains to be seen. She will probably be welcomed as a very old friend. Among the new ballads she sang last night was 'If Ever I Cease to Love.' In other respects the company remains unchanged, and the programme has nothing very novel upon it..... The various other halls remain just as stated last week. J. P. Hill and Jim Hays are in their last week at the Pacific, and, with Maggie Mortimer, are to go to Pittsburg, I believe."

JOHN M. BURKE, Irish comedian, vocalist and dancer, is no longer connected with the "Mirror of Ireland," and advertises that he can be engaged after Oct. 14th.

SIMMONS, vocalist and mimic, and Emma Alford, serio-comic vocalist and dancer, are favorably noticed by the Syracuse, N. Y., journals, as will be seen by extracts in another column. They continue at Wild's Opera House this week, where they can be addressed.

GUS. FOSTER, song and dance and general performer, advertises that he can be engaged.

FIRST-CLASS ARTISTS and artists with specialties are wanted for the Front Street Theatre Comique, Baltimore, Md. See advertisement.

THE BROOKLYN OLYMPIC was well patronised during the past week, the drama of "Karl; or, Watch on the Rhine," proving attractive. This week the popular Emma Grattan is to appear in her favorite character of Little Jack Sheppard.

THE BROOKLYN GLOBE did a fair business last week, with G. W. Jester, Kelly, O'Neil and the Arabian Brothers as the stars of the troupe. This week Charley White takes the stage in conjunction with several new faces at the Globe.

BRUNSWICK HALL, Springfield, Ill., was opened Oct. 5th by a variety company, and under the management of Kraft & Co. The following is a list of the performers:—Frank Steele, stage manager; John Curtis, pantomimist; C. L. Banks, comedian; Master McIntyre, song and dance man and cloggist; Charley Hanlin, juggler and comic singer; Miss Jennie Cole, La Belle Laura, Mlle. Sallie, Prof. Schultz, leader of the orchestra. Miss Nellie Chiford and Joe Malley were engazed, but broke their contract. La Belle Blanche, song and dance lady, is underlined. The management propose to make a permanent place of amusement of this hall, under the title of Metropolitan Theatre. So wrote our correspondent, Oct. 7th.

AT SMITH'S OPERA HOUSE, East Saginaw, Mich., George Kurtz closed his engagement on the 6th. Billy De Vere and Joe Childsor are the latest arrivals. The company, in addition to these, consists of Den Howe, Master Johnnie, Fred. Harris, Frank Benton, Belle Ifferd, Fannie Florence, Lillie De Berg, Maud Le Roy, Ida Wallace and Fannie Valade. Lillie De Berg, while playing the character of Jack Sheppard, fell from the prison window and hurt herself quite badly on the night of the 2d inst. So wrote our correspondent on Oct. 5th.

THE STRONG BILL presented at the Varieties Theatre Pittsburgh, Pa., this (last) week served to draw together good houses, and the performance was fair. Jim Hines, Pooley Mace, James Cusick, Pedanto, Butler, Donaldson and Professor Davis' performing dogs comprise the fresh attractions. The Maces and Cusick appeared each evening in an assault at arms in ring costume, and the auditory vociferously applauded. Robert Butler and Frank Donaldson give the utmost satisfaction as pantomimists. Prof. Davis' dogs do an almost endless variety of tricks, and do them exceedingly well. Pedanto's ceiling walking and trapeze performances meet with favor. Hurley and Mart continue to be held in high esteem as song and dance artists, and are very clever. So wrote our correspondent on Oct. 6th.

LON CHAPIN'S VARIETY THEATRE, Scranton, Pa., has enjoyed a week of excellent business, the manager having added six new faces to his complete company:—Charley Benedict, comedian; Billy Wilson, song and dance; Barney Reynolds, character songster; Prof. Lee, gymnast; Ada Grinell, statue artist, and Fannie Duane, sentimental vocalist. Charley Benedict and Barney Reynolds were enthusiastically received, as were all the new comers, with the single exception of Miss Duane, who, as a vocalist, is a comparative failure. Miss Allie Morton, in her male and female changes, has met with considerable favor. So wrote our correspondent, Oct. 7th.

AT FIELDING'S OPERA HOUSE, Toledo, O., a thriving business has been done since the return, on Oct. 2d, of Mr. Fielding from the Metropolitan Company. In the hands of some of the most prominent men of the city, and is intended as a recognition of the valuable services of Mr. Leman during the late gubternatorial election..... A dramatic company under the management of R. H. Cox has been performing at Petaluma during the past week. Pierpont Thayer was stage manager..... The New York Mammoth Circus performed on the 29th inst. in the County Fair, which commenced Sept. 25th and closed yesterday. They did a rushing business..... Mrs. F. W. Lander commenced a short engagement at the Salt Lake, Utah Territory, Theatre, on Sept. 25th..... Proctor's Dramatic Company, of this city, is to perform at Marysville during the continuance of the Yuba County Fair, which commences at that city on the 9th inst..... Dan R. Sample, business manager of the Sacramento Record, of this city, died here yesterday of congestion of the brain, after an illness of one week. Deceased was very much esteemed and well known in dramatic circles of this coast."

MISS MARIAN MORDAUNT is having a play written for her by T. B. De Walden, introducing some fine changes of character. She proposes starring on a tour through the country with the same about the middle of December.

Variety Halls.

To Managers, Agents, Doorkeepers and Others.

Every regularly authorized correspondent of the NEW YORK CLIPPER is supplied with the necessary credentials, in the shape of a card, with an engraving of the CLIPPER Building on one side, and on the other the name of the correspondent, city, etc., signed by the proprietor of the paper, with the stamp of the office, and date of Sept. 1st, 1871, affixed thereto, each card running for six months, when new ones will be issued on the return of the old, but one representative being recognized in each place. We particularly request that managers of entertainments will decline extending favors to any person representing himself as correspondent of this paper who cannot produce the card referred to. By acceding to this request, managers will not be imposed on by irresponsible parties. Cards are only issued to correspondents of the amusement department of this paper. Parties applying for the position of correspondent are respectfully requested to consider silence a negative.

ARTISTS are wanted for the Theatre Comique, New Haven, Conn. Address as per advertisement.

LITTLE SAMMY UNSWORTH, song and dance artist, who can be addressed care of this office, wants an engagement.

JENNIE KIMBALL and her sister are noticed as follows by the Syracuse Daily Journal:—

Wild's Opera House.—Miss Jennie Kimball and sister were the leading attractions at Wild's last night. They appeared in their dashing character roles and were received with rounds of applause. Their costumes were rich and elegant and their acting surpasses anything of the kind ever seen in this city. They are to appear again this evening, on the occasion of the benefit to Messrs. Shimer and Foley.

AT THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Bay City, Mich., business has been very fair during the week. Billy Devere closed a very successful engagement Sept. 30th. He opened at Smith's Opera House, East Saginaw, Oct. 2d, remaining only three nights; thence to Chicago, where he opens Oct. 11th. Belle Hord, vocalist, opens here Oct. 16th. On the boards this week are Miss Lizzie Sherman, vocalist; Charlie Adams, comedian; Harry Watson, song and dance; Maude Howard, danseuse; Eva Brekner and Annie Sherwood, vocalist; Ed Judge, barjoist. G. Brooks Clark is stage manager. So wrote our correspondent, Oct. 5th.

AT THE FRONT STREET THEATRE COMIQUE, BALTIMORE, Md., a new series of attractions was offered on Oct. 2d and during the week, and the house was consequently liberally patronised. The new faces were Alf. Burnett, humorist, who appeared in conjuction with Miss Helen Nash, the elocutionist, in "Caudle's Curtain Lecture' and met with a favorable reception; J. W. Sharpey, the contortionist, who was frequently encored; Messrs. Quitter and Goodrich, the clever Ethiopian song and dance artists. Rollin Howard and Charley Burgess are still here, appearing in a laughable sketch called "O-li-i-O," as also are Billy Carter, the proficient banjoist; Mlle. Tarrell, vocalist; Frank Gibsons, the ambidexian performer, and Miss Martha Wren, a pretty and bewitching young lady, who appeared with James Collier in several negro sketches. Miss Rosenleberg and Pagani and the ballet appeared in a divertissement entitled the "Vivandieres of the South." The afterpiece was "A Dark Cloud; or, the Shadow of Guilt." Miss Jennie Hughes, the vocalist, is underlined for Oct. 9th..... At the Baltimore Opera House Prof. Robert Heller, the magician and ventriloquist; Jennie Howard, the vocalist, and Lizzie Louise, danseuse, were the new appearances, all of whom were favorably received. Annie Hindle continues here, appearing in the sketch "Barney's Courtship," which proves a great success; also Otto Burbank and Dick Parker in their Ethiopian delineations. Jennie Benson, and a number of other novelties, are announced for next week. So wrote our correspondent on Oct. 6th.

THE HYAMS SISTERS closed their engagement at Petersburg, Va., Oct. 7th. Miss Mollie Somers is announced to commence there to-night, Oct. 9th.

LEW PIKE'S THEATRE COMIQUE COMPANY performed at Bridgeport, Conn., Oct. 7th.

THE PAREPA-ROSA RENEDICT OPERA COMPANY performed at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, L. I., on Thursday evening, Oct. 5th, in the "Daughter of the Regiment," with the same cast as given in New York. The Academy was crowded, and Mme. Parepa-Rosa and the entire company received a most enthusiastic greeting.

G. F. BARNARD, leader of orchestra, whose address is in another column, can be engaged.

A NEW IRISH SONG, "Good Bye to Norah," has just been published by J. D. Russell & Co., of Boston.

MR. GEO. E. MANSFIELD,
ALIAS GEO. LEVANTINE.

Seeing your uncalled-for remarks in the last CLIPPER, I will state in reply that I am the ORIGINAL and ONLY LEVANTINE in the business. It was I that gave you that name when I took you from your father's shoe bench in Boston and made you the performer that you are.

George! George! look back and think how hard I worked, of the hours I spent in teaching you, when we were with L. B. Lent, so that you might earn an honorable living.

As far as being "SCRUB PERFORMERS," I will leave that for Managers to decide, as you are not capable to judge. You do not know a good act when you see it; some one has to tell you.

You are the bogus and I am the original
